Will save $102,000 plus

Cohasset to escape MBTA District

By David Cutler

Unlike Charlie of song who never could escape, Cohasset and 21 other communities may finally get off the MBTA merry-go-round.

The new state budget, which was winning approval this week, contains provisions that will allow Cohasset and 21 other communities which pay MBTA assessments but receive no service to withdraw from the MBTA District.

That action means that Cohasset will save at least $102,400 a year while escaping an MBTA assessment that has done nothing but increase since it was pushed through legislature as a temporary measure in 1969.

In 1970, the town's assessment was $36,702. By 1980 it had nearly tripled to $102,400 and was expected to increase again this year and next.

The new budget approved this week allows voters in the 22 unserviced towns to decide whether their communities will remain in the MBTA District. Specifically, the bill calls for a referendum in the November 1982 elections asking voters to vote yes or no on continuing to pay MBTA assessments. A yes vote isn't expected in Cohasset or any of the other 21 communities involved. "It could be the first unanimous referendum vote in history," said one state representative, William Flynn of Hanover.

The legislation contained in the budget could be "line item vetoed" by Gov. Edward King, but the referendum provision makes that less likely and if it should happen, a legislative override would probably follow.

As the legislation stands now, Cohasset will be required to pay the MBTA assessment through December of 1982. Thereafter, the assessments will end.

Legislative efforts to remove unserviced communities from the MBTA District have been perennial failures since 1970, receiving no more than perfunctory attention from the Legislature's Transportation Committee.

Last fall, however, representatives from the 22 communities involved contemplated legal action with the idea that assessment could at least be reduced even if removal was a lost cause. Urban legislators have had little sympathy for their suburban counterparts over this issue, dismissing the suburbs as "rich little" towns that deserve a commuter tax. It was, in fact, the urban legislators who pushed through the "Temporary" assessments at a night session in 1969.

With the legal fight making little headway, the removal issue seemed a lost cause once again until late last week when the fine art of legislative compromise began in earnest.

With conferees from the House and Senate arguing over a new state budget, a small group of legislators lead by maverick Philip Johnston, a Democrat from Marshfield, persuaded the leadership of both branches to consider removal. Persuading Senate Ways and Means Chairman Chester Atkins was no problem. He comes from suburban, nearly rural, Maynard. House Speaker Thomas McGee from Lynn was less enthusiastic, but after being persuaded that the loss of 22 assessments (about $3.3 million) would not prove catastrophic to the T, went along as well.

The rest, as they say, is history.

Release from the MBTA is unrelated to any additional state aid that Cohasset will receive this year or next. Therefore elimination of the MBTA assessment can be considered a true windfall.

Exec. secretary to be named this week

The town's first executive secretary is supposed to be appointed by the selectmen at their meeting beginning at 8 tonight (Wednesday) at town hall.

There seems little chance the job will go to an out-of-towner. There are seven finalists weeded out of the original 70 applicants. Three of the finalists are well-known Cohassetites.

Arthur Clark, 73, former selectman and long-time full-time volunteer for the town, is one of the finalists.

So is Marilyn Sweeney, member of the board of health, and outreach worker with the elderly for South Shore Homecare Services.

And then there's Peter Pratt, 26, the youngest finalist, former campaign worker for defeated candidate for representative Ted Ford and present political consultant.

All three have agreed to accept the salary range of $15,000 to $20,000, as specified by the selectmen.

Odds are the job will go to one of the three. Clark would be considered the favorite. But the job is hardly sewed up, according to reports from people who know but don't want to go public.

Clark said he hasn't talked with any of the Selctmen about the job and he doesn't know who they will appoint.

He said he is looking for the job on his record.

"If they want me, all right. If they don't, all right," Clark said. He agreed many of the people at his testimonial were talking about the possibility.

Clark has 44 years experience in town government. He had his own plumbing business for 22 years. Since giving up his plumbing business, Clark has been doing the job the executive secretary will be paid to do.

Peter Pratt said he is sure the selectmen will make a fair decision. He pointed out the job will involve far more than 40 hours a week, if it is done properly.

Pratt has a degree in government from Bard

Scituate won't share boat tax money

By Patricia Desmond

Scituate doesn't plan to turn over any money to Cohasset from the boat taxes collected for its land in Cohasset Harbor.

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray is blamed by Scituate officials. They say they don't want to pay the amount negotiated by officials of both communities because Rep. Murray is sponsoring a bill to turn their land over to Cohasset.

Meanwhile the Harbor Study Committee is thinking about establishing new fees for users of the harbor. Charles Fink, committee chairman, said his group will prepare recommendations for the selectmen at their next meeting scheduled for Thursday, Aug. 6, at town hall.

Among the ideas under consideration are: a $25 annual fee for use of town floats, a fee per foot for private floats in the harbor and a charge for the use of lobster cars, holding tanks.

It seems the user fees would begin to address the point of the lost boat excise tax.

A meeting held last Thursday to discuss the fees was attended by only a dozen or so residents. Most had some concerns about one or more fees.

If Scituate were to pay half the boat excise tax to Cohasset for harbor maintenance, it would come to $980.11. Selectman Mary Jane McArthur pointed out she wasn't in office when discussion of the harbor tax came up, but she said she didn't think that amount would make much difference to the town.

Rep. Murray said that from 1965 to the present, Cohasset has spent $365,000 on improvements and expansion in the harbor.

She said Scituate is the only town in the state collecting money for boats in a harbor it doesn't maintain. She listed several situations similar to the case of Scituate and Cohasset. In the other cases, the town that maintains the harbor collects the taxes.

"According to law, Scituate is entitled to the money. But those things can be waived. And according to that same law half the money is supposed to go to a fund for harbor maintenance," she said.

Duxbury owns land in Plymouth Harbor and doesn't collect the taxes, she said. There is a harbor on the Cape owned by three communities. The one maintaining the harbor collects the money.

"Scituate is not even able to get its harbormaster into the harbor," she said, adding that the Cohasset

Bus hike hearing

The Department of Public Utilities has agreed to hold an additional public hearing on the proposed rate increase by the Plymouth & Brockton Bus Company.

The first hearing will be held on Thursday, July 16 at 7:30 p.m. at the Plymouth Town Hall, Large Hearing Room, 11 Lincoln Street, Plymouth.

The second hearing will be held on Monday, July 20 at noon at 100 Cambridge Street, 12th floor, Hearing Room, Boston.

Tennis court update

Harold Solomon and Elliot Felcher, who are seeded as number 2 and 3 at Longwood Tennis Club, played tennis on the controversial tennis court on Rice Island Monday.

They were the guests of Lowry and Diana Bell, whose interest in tennis is well documented. The court at the end of Gammons Road is being landscaped this week. Pines will line the dark vinyl fence.

Several other interesting things have happened recently to the principals in the argument.

Peter and Marilyn Mazza, who vehemently oppose the existence of the court, located across the street from their home, have rented their house for the summer. Reportedly they are staying in Connecticut. The suit they are backing over the court continues in appeals court.

And last week Diana Bell began proceedings to construct a small dock on Little Harbor. A conservation commission hearing is required since docks by definition are built on wetlands.

Mrs. Bell pointed out that if the same reasoning used in the tennis court case were applied to her application to build a dock, she would be forced to construct the structure 30 feet away from their rear lot line, or to put it more explicitly, 300 feet away from the water.

Building Inspector James Litchfield won't comment on the case while the litigation is pending, which could be a matter of years.

Labor relations hearing

Police Chief John DeBassio and other town officials testified before a hearing's officer for the state Labor Relations Board last week on the issue of the clerk-dispatcher for the police station.

Yvette Rattenbury is the clerk. She was hired this summer to fill a position that once was filled by a police officer. Chief DeBassio in making out his budget had proposed the clerk's job as a way of making some budget reductions needed to comply with Proposition 2½. The position replaced by Mrs. Rattenbury was vacant at the time.

No one on the police department was let go due to 2½.

Sgt. Richard Barrow, president of the Patrolmen's Association, said a decision from the state is expected in a few weeks.

There are two other grievances from the police union pending with selectmen. One is over the selectmen's refusal to grant a leave of absence to Patrolman Gerald Doyle. Doyle left the department to work for the MIT security. He sought a six month leave to try the job.

The other pending grievance is over the board's decision not to appoint Fred Huntwork, a retired police officer, as a summer special.

Postal strike threatened

Rumors of a pending postal service strike picked up speed this week as the end of their contract draws closer.

The existing agreement runs out Monday, July 20. And there's plenty of verbal activity implying workers will go off their jobs Tuesday morning if certain issues aren't settled at the Washington, D.C. negotiating table before that time.

Already on strike are Canadian postal service men and women.

Final report cards for the school year for students in grades 7 through 11 at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School were mailed Monday, July 13.

Some student's cards were not mailed as those students failed to meet an obligation to return school property. Books are still missing, according to school officials.

Students or parents who did not receive the mailing are requested to call the school, 383-6100 or 6101 for information.

T assessment ridiculous says Murray

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray who has filed legislation to get Cohasset out of MBTA five times now said the MBTA assessment is "ridiculous."

"It's one of the ways we waste money in this state," she said during a break in discussion of the budget at the State House.

"I just got the word on it. Any town that has not had MBTA service in the last 10 years will be let out (of the MBTA district)."

Rep. Murray said she will be filing legislation next year to try to get Hull, which had MBTA service through a subsidy until the Spring, out of the district.

The same bus in Hull that was running as a deficit operation under the MBTA is now running as a profit-making business with South Shore Bus. She pointed out many people in Hingham, which has a bus route on its North side, get no MBTA service.

Scituate won't share tax money

harbormaster serves as clam warden on the land officially in Scituate at Bassings Beach. Bassings Beach is owned by the Cohasset Conservation Trust, although it is located within the boundary of Scituate.

The dispute between the two communities over the boat tax began last year when the law was changed. Until last year boat excise taxes were due to the community where the boat was kept on Jan. 1. The new law says the money is due to the community where the boat is moored on July 1.

Should Cohasset adopt the concept of charging for private floats, it will be the first in the region, officials say.

Should it decide against establishment of a docking fee for the town float, it will probably be the only one in the region.

The idea behind the fees is to make the harbor self-supporting because of Proposition 2½.

State aid will rise by $150,000 this year

Cohasset will be getting $150,000 more than last year in state aid.

Last year Cohasset received roughly $900,000, according to Town Accountant William Signorelli. That's the amount that was used in putting together this year's budget.

What happens to the extra money?

Officials aren't sure. It could be the tax rate may be less than the allowed $25 based on 100 percent valuation. It could be a special town meeting may spend the money.

Time to auction

Let's auction off the town's two abandoned fire stations.

We all know the fire stations in Beechwood and North Cohasset are being used as garages for extra fire trucks. It seems that use is a waste of town resources. The station in Beechwood would probably be a good spot for condominiums or just an unusual old home for a large-sized family. The station in North Cohasset would be a great store. The town could certainly use the revenue generated by putting the properties back on the tax rolls. Proposition 2½ and all that.

Fire Chief Charles Piepenbrink said just last week he doesn't know what will happen to the stations. He said their fate is up to the townspeople. Selectmen are thinking about boarding them up to reduce the chance of vandalism.

He uses the pieces of fire equipment stored in the abandoned stations as back-up to the more extensive equipment kept at the town's only manned fire station, the central station on Elm Street.

It seems unlikely the people in Beechwood who were lobbying heavily for a new station there will appreciate the logic of the auction. But then even if they had been able to persuade town meeting to appropriate funds to follow up on the plans for the new station, it's doubtful the chief would have been able to find the manpower to staff it.

After all it was the chief's decision to close both the stations at different times. It's his responsibility to run the department as he sees fit.

So far it seems he's been doing very well. What could have been a major tragedy recently when a gasoline truck overturned turned out to be a story about a job well done.

It seems the fire department regularly make a habit of putting out the trouble before it's too late. They're doing that with one station now. They can go right on continuing their good work from one station.

It's only too bad that one station isn't more centrally located.

The T exodus

Getting out of the MBTA is a wonderful happening, one that should have happened a long time ago.

The logic of tossing Cohasset into the MBTA district was something only understood by bureaucrats and Boston politicians.

The town will be saving more than $102,400 a year by the time the proposal is supposed to take effect. We know because that's the assessment for last year and never in the history of the MBTA has the assessment gone down.

The way-out provided by the legislature could be

The incurable disease ... !&★%?

By Claire McDonough

Five weeks ago, acting on his belief that chronic cursers are sick people who need help, Paul White of Cambridge established the nation's first chapter of Cursaholics Anonymous. This week White abandoned his project. Because too many people were calling his hotline number and swearing.

This may not be as whacky as Mr. White believes. I mean, there may be situations where cursing is the only reasonable response. Consider.

CA Volunteer: Cursaholics Anonymous. Dear me, can I help you?

Caller: Please. I need help desperately. I feel a profanity coming on, and I don't think I can control myself.

CA Volunteer: Now, now. Just get a grip on yourself. Can you go for one day without cursing?

Caller: I — I think so.

CA Volunteer: That's all it takes. We stop cursing one day at a time. I too was a curser — until I found CA. Gee whiz, I can remember one single evening when I caught myself swearing at a supermarket, a P.T.O. meeting and a church supper. I reached a point where I had to curse first thing in the morning just to get out of bed. I used to sneak curses by pretending to sneeze. I was really cursing under my breath. It was disgusting. Thank goodness for CA. Since I discovered this fellowship I've learned that I don't have to swear. If I can stay away from one profanity, one day at a time, I've got it licked.

Caller: That's easy for you to say. You don't work for the government. You haven't had payless pay days. You don't have to work weird hours because the legislature's in session. You don't have to cope with cockroaches. You don't — I can't stop myself — I'm going to curse!

CA Volunteer: Don't give in! Just hold on a little while! You can do it. Com on, now — take a deep breath.

Caller: #[$% & !...[!

CA Volunteer: My stars! There's no need for that kind of language. Just put your mind on something else. Think about the positive aspects of your job. Think about one thing the government did today that will be on the lips of everyone in the community.

Caller: The &$/#&!% granted the P&B Bus Company another rate hike.

CA Volunteer: %&($#))###&&##$!

Super Mom now a free agent

By Patricia Desmond

Once upon a time, not long ago, in this very town by the mighty sea, there was a woman named Super Mom.

Her hair was brown with gray streaks. Those streaks came from living and living more. No bottled streaks those. She often wore her hair in two floppy ponytails, as school girls sometimes do. She thought nothing about the incongruity of it all. In fact, she gave little thought to her hair, except to keep it clean and out of her eyes. She did that because she liked to see.

Anyway Super Mom lived in a large white house within smelling distance of the harbor. She lived there with her four children, her Beloved, a dog, a cat and a gerbil.

Super Mom had a high pressure but low-paying job. I suppose that's because she's a woman. Because of her job, all the kids got the chance to go to camp — daycamp — for the summer. All of the kids liked the idea of going to camp but they never wanted to help with the work of getting ready. That's because they were normal, well-adjusted but slightly spoiled children.

The oldest child and the only girl was named July. She had hair of gold and eyes as blue as the Bermuda ocean. She sometimes helped greatly. But more often begged to go bicycle riding when it was time to wash the limitless towels needed to get through the day or time to make the four or so peanut butter, marshmallow and jelly sandwiches, peel the apples and count out cookies for the lunch bags.

The next child was named Gosh. He was a quiet child, very ambitious and determined.

He would always help with the housework, as long as he was being paid minimum wage plus insurance benefits.

Gosh was good at saving and making money. He was a skinny child with brown eyes and a rope he used to lasso his father anytime the man came into view.

The third child was named Wren. He was full of hugs and smiles and charms reserved for sorcerers. He, of course, was too young to do anything but clean up after himself and he chose not to do that.

Wren also had brown eyes — his were as big as oreo cookies. And he always had tangles in his hair, because he hated combs as a matter of principle.

The youngest child was named Mit. I think he got that name because he was playing hardball at two. He was as much help around the house as a tornado. He was cute and adorable, however.

And Super Mom loved them all.

But she was tired of housework. She especially objected to being the only person in the house who knew how to wash the lemonade off the kitchen floor and being the only person in the house who knew how to scrub a toilet bowl.

She also thought that if the children chose to eat their bath towels instead of sandwiches, they should at least go without complaining about the constant fact that the bathrooms contained only toilet paper and face cloths, aside from the necessary appliances, of course.

One day, I think it was last week, when Super Mom was using old newspaper to sop up the lemonade on the kitchen floor, she noticed a story about something called a baseball strike. Mit hadn't even mentioned it heretofore.

It seems this baseball strike reached much farther than our New England town by the mighty sea. It reached all through the land.

Super Mom decided to read the partially sticky story, wondering how athletes could go on strike. Afterall sports aren't supposed to be based on money. They're supposed to be based in competition and other virtues.

She thought the idea of a baseball player going on strike made as much sense as a mother going on strike. Afterall mothers love being mothers and baseball players love being baseball players, or that's how it's supposed to be.

Well, she kept reading the slightly water-stained (or lemonade-stained) paper until she got to the heart of the matter. The baseball players weren't striking for money, they were striking to be something called free agents.

Super Mom smiled as she read the words.

"Free agent," she said aloud and laughed with her wonderful motherly giggle. "Free agent," she said again. "What a wonderful idea.

"Even a mother could go on strike to be a free agent." And so she did.

Studds gloomy on Reagan & Co.

Twenty or so people sat on the lawn of Cohasset Common Sunday listening to the clear, sweet tones of the carillon in the tower at St. Stephen's Church.

Meanwhile, inside town hall, U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds talked over national and international affairs with a dozen interested residents and the local press corps.

Studds sat on a table at the front of the auditorium in shirt sleeves talking about what scares him in the world today.

He talked in quiet tones about being scared by Alexander Haig and other people who see things in black and white terms, by Ronald Reagan and his economics.

Rita Burke, who leads the Pro Family Forum, wanted to know how she could stop Planned Parenthood from obtaining federal funds to promote sex education.

Studds and his aides didn't know how Planned Parenthood gets federal money. He assured her he favored the organization, nevertheless.

Mrs. Burke described a film "On Sex" that was shown to a Senate hearing as pornographic. She complained that this was harming the family, the basic unit of society.

She complained that a Teen Clinic in Hull distributes literature she called scandalous. She read a quote about teenagers being able to obtain contraceptives without their parents' knowledge or permission.

"Do you think that will strengthen our family unit?" she asked.

"If you had a child and were trying to control that child with your values, what would you do?"

Studds said he was worried by the assumptions that underlie the language. He said he didn't think attempts to control children work. He thinks the opposite results happen when that attempt is made.

Mrs. Burke said she's upset at how her federal tax money is being used to fund the program.

"I'm at least as upset as you are at what's being done with my tax money," Studds said.

The debate went on in the same polite way. Neither Mrs. Burke nor her Congressman seemed to change any opinions in the course of the talk.

A woman in the audience spoke out about her concern that too much is being heard from the Moral Majority. She said her view was the opposite of Mrs. Burke.

Back in the field of international affairs, Studds pointed out he is in the minority in Congress when trying to cut off military aid to countries like Guatemala and El Salvador.

"Human rights is no longer a factor in American foreign policy," Studds said.

He called Haig an insecure person who sees the world in simplistic terms.

"He tends to see everything in terms of a U.S./Russian conflict."

Studds pointed out that the Reagan budget is not going to be less than last year's budget.

The spending will just shift from social programs to defense.

Studds believes that five years from now with all the additional spending, the U.S. will be in a less secure position.

snapped shut by the governor. If he should want to make quite a few enemies along the way.

What the town got for its $102,400 this past year was the chance to know the MBTA was available from Braintree to Cambridge, with its overpaid employees and deficit ridden concepts.

Now there will have to be some alternative way of financing Cohasset's share of the pork barrel. The best idea is to find the funds through budget cuts in the operation. Let a few employees go. Cut overtime out entirely. Economize.

Casino report will be factual

Dear Rep. Murray:

At your request, in the absence of the Director who is on holiday leave, I have examined the article appearing in the July 8, 1981 edition of the Quincy Patriot-Ledger which contains a number of statements attributed to Mr. Anthony Ventresca, a member of the staff of the Legislative Research Bureau, in connection with a pending study of the economic and social impact of casino gambling in Massachusetts.

My overall impression of the article is that it does a disservice to the general readership by misleading statements as to what the report will contain and by misrepresenting the function of the Legislative Research Bureau.

The article, as written, implies that the Bureau is about ready to submit a report that will be favorable to the casino gambling interests. For the record, the Bureau's examination of the probable economic and social impact of casino gambling in Massachusetts is still in progress with considerable statistical data yet to be gathered, analyzed and interpreted. No draft of the report, not even one in preliminary form, has yet been prepared. When a first draft is ready, it will be subjected to the closest scrutiny and editorial criticism by the Bureau's supervisory personnel, given the intense controversy that surrounds this most sensitive issue. The report when complete will not be, in the jargon of legislative procedure, a favorable or unfavorable report. It will be a factual report, presenting both sides of the issue, containing no recommendations.

It is regrettable that the author of the newspaper article does not understand the function of the Legislative Research Bureau. As you know, this agency, by statute, is limited to "statistical research and fact-finding" (G.L. c. 3, s. 59) and in its more than a quarter century of operations has built a reputation for objectivity that is jealously guarded. There will be no deviation from that record in the matter currently under study.

Given the information I have outlined above, it is premature for the reporter or anyone else to construct a story on what this Bureau will report. When all of the data are assembled, analyzed, interpreted and reduced to findings, then, and only then, can an objective commentary be written. At this point, we frankly do not know what those findings will be.

I trust that these comments suffice to correct the erroneous impression that the article tends to present.

If we may be of further assistance, please let us know.

Casinos no boon to Atlantic City seniors

Carol Oteri, president of Citizens Against Casino Gambling, Inc., recently discussed reports from Atlantic City documenting the impact of legalized casino gambling on that city's elderly population. "The 'Fool's Gold' of casino gambling did not provide the security promised for the 'golden years' of that city's elderly citizens," said Oteri.

She referred to a study by Stockton State College which found senior citizens in the famous seaside resort struggling to stay afloat in the sea of change that has swept through since the introduction of legalized casino gambling. "Is this what casino backers mean when they mention a 'ripple effect'?", she quipped.

Oteri pointed to published Social Security statistics which indicate that the number of senior citizens in Atlantic City has been steadily decreasing at the same time it has been increasing elsewhere in New Jersey.

"This is not a case where the elderly reaped enormous profits and left in style. An economic upheaval that was supposed to have benefited them has, instead, penalized them and forced many to leave."

"They speak of their fear of crime, especially burglary and personal assault. Almost all speak of the difficulty of making ends meet, the lack of affordable housing, and the fact that they do not want to move from their present homes. All try to maintain daily routines similar to those that they enjoyed in the past. Disappearance of the places they used to enjoy and considered local landmarks disturbs them."

One Atlantic City official interviewed by researchers became crazed with get-rich-quick ideas, which functioned to impede efforts to increase the city's housing stock." Oteri explained that elderly residents and incoming casino workers competed for existing housing spaces.

Oteri remarked that rampant real estate speculation results in escalating property evaluations. "The bottom line is high rents and high taxes, an intolerable situation for anyone on a fixed income," Oteri added.

Noting that editorial writers in Atlantic City are calling for sociological studies to focus on the continued plight and flight of the elderly impacted by casinos, Oteri issued a warning that "coping mechanisms arrive too late, if ever, for residents in rapidly developing areas. Any huge influx of new residents or transients is not something to be desired. Hull presently has a family-type orientation. Our elderly residents would have a great deal of difficulty adapting to a gaudy commercial, impersonal environment."

Referring to the Stockton Study, Oteri quoted its conclusion that "political powerlessness and economic pressures make it virtually impossible for most of the Atlantic City elderly to do anything about their situation. New Jersey and New York newspapers are filled with references to the political connections enjoyed by casino operators. If only senior citizens had the same clout!"

"Every senior citizen in this state and every person who cares about senior citizens should realize what could happen to seniors in areas presently targeted for casino development, as well as in those areas waiting in the wings. In Hull alone two casino promoters have surfaced. Talk to knowledgeable local residents. They will tell you that there are at least five prime sites for casino development within our boundaries. A lot of people would be displaced, people who proudly called Hull 'home'."

Recreation Dept. sponsors balloon day

The recreation department sponsored its balloon day last Friday, turning the sky over the high school into a multi-colored field of bubbles.

Jay Rattenbury stood on the sidelines watching the group slowly prepare to send off the card-carrying balloons.

The balloon that travels the farthest will earn a prize for its sender. Cards listed the name of the sender on each helium-filled balloon.

One of the first balloons to fly off belonged to Jed Terry, 7. His white balloon escaped before the official start of the race.

Last year only one card was returned. But then Jack Worley, director of recreation, pointed out that the whole batch headed straight out to sea last year. This year the wind took them inland.

Fire Facts

Electrical storms are a frequent occurrence this time of year. There is a tremendous amount of power associated with an electrical storm and precautions should be taken to protect your family and home.

According to the National Fire Protection Association, lightning strikes approximately 800 Americans each year, with 100 of these victims being fatally injured. Lightning also causes about 20,000 building fires each year, and many forest fires.

The following precautions should be considered, for your safety, during an electrical storm:

•If you are inside, stay inside. If you are outside, seek shelter inside, except in very small buildings.

•If you are outside, keep away from trees, and shelters that are in exposed areas. Avoid such things as hilltops and wire fences. Lightning follows the shortest route to earth, and these areas are more likely to be struck by lightning.

•If possible, first seek a building with a lightning rod system. The next best choice is a large unprotected building. If there is no building near, crouch down in the shelter of any available depression in the ground.

•If you are in the water in any manner, such as swimming or boating, get to shore quickly. Stay away from the water because it is a very good conductor of electricity.

•Never fly a kite during an electrical storm.

•Make sure that all outside antennas on your house are properly grounded.

This year, the Champagne Preview for the Annual Scituate Arts Festival is returning to the Satuit Boat Club and it promises to be much more than the usual pre-festival party; in fact, it will be two previews in one.

Michael Kennedy and his wife, Rachel along with Neil and Katherine Smith of Duxbury will be co-hosts for this event. The champagne fountain will be decorated with ivy from the gardens of Marie Anuinette, courtesy of Mrs. Charles Donze of Cohasset and it will share the refreshment table with an abundance of tasty hor d'oeuvres contributed by association members.

Winning entries for the 24th Annual Scituate Arts Festival will be on view and awards presented by Charles Mahoney, President of the Guild of Boston Artists, as well as by Michael Kennedy. The winners of the Juried Shows will share the spotlight with another group. Members of Scituate's "Young People's Theatre" will present a preview of their own.

Under the direction of Donald Capen and Mike Martineau, this group will perform excerpts from their upcoming musicals, "Damn Yankees" and "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying." The full productions of these musicals will be held July 24 and 25 and Aug. 7 and 8, respectively.

The 24th Annual Scituate Arts Festival Preview will be held at the Satuit Boat Club, 66 Jericho Road Wednesday, July 22 from 7-9 p.m. Those interested in attending may call Rachel Kennedy at 545-4127 for ticket information.

Chapman is Sailing Club winner

Peter Chapman and his crew mate Steve D'Onofrio, combined to win Saturday's Flying Scott Fleet race held in Cohasset Harbor.

Chapman's boat is in first place after eight races in the 15-race series of the summer.

The races which range between one and two miles are held Saturday afternoons. The fleet is independent of the Cohasset Sailing Club.

After eight races, the boat owned by Chet Ellis and Roger Porter are tied for second place and third place is tied between Ray Kasperowicz and Terry Young.

A boat co-owned by Dave Croninger and Rob Henry has placed fourth in the series.

Placing second in the near two-mile race Saturday was Young who was assisted by his crew of Christine Barrett and Regina Schultz.

Ellis, Porter and their crewmate Pam Ellis placed third and a boat co-owned by Kasperowicz with a crewmate of Bob Davenport placed fourth.

Peter Goedecke and his crewmate, Joe D'Onofrio placed fifth. Dave Croninger and his crewmate of Rob Henry finished sixth and a boat co-owned by Peter Conway, Dick Horn and Jerry Schultz placed seventh.

Chapman's boat led all the way. Competition was close throughout the race with Young just edging out the Ellis and Porter boat for second place.

The boats started using a Spinnaker or a downwind start. This meant the boats started out with the wind.

around town

Ann Grinnell Wells is living in Kittery Point, Maine with her husband Rod, who runs the Music Warehouse in Portsmouth, N.H. and their daughter Jody, who is a year old. Ann is expecting another child in August. She is still teaching swimming at Marge and Arthur Martin's pool and also runs her own photography studio out of her home.

The Wells' home was designed by her brother Dick Grinnell who is living in Waitsfield, Vermont with his wife Robin. The house is a beautiful passive solar heated structure. The southern exposure is a glass expanse with a roof overhang which protects the house from the summer sun. The northern side has only two windows with a pine tree grove shield which guards against the north wind. It has six inches of insulation around the house and twelve inches in the roof. Ann has a 10-year landscaping plan for the grounds. She also plans to have a photography gallery on the long wall in the living area.

Summer fair at Ripley Road Nursing Home

Ripley Road Nursing Home will sponsor its annual summer fair Saturday, July 18, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Proceeds of the fair go to the Residents' Recreation Fund which provides for outings for the residents. Last year residents enjoyed a boat trip to Boston and a fishing trip in Cohasset Harbor.

Hand-made crafts have been made by many residents for the hand-craft table.

Other tables include plants, home-baked goods, jewelry, toys for children and a white elephant table with donations by many friends of Ripley Road Nursing Home.

Generous merchants have donated gifts for the raffle with winners of lucky raffle tickets to be announced at the end of the fair at 4 p.m.

Coffee and doughnuts will be served in the morning, and a snack bar will serve hamburgers and hot dogs for lunch. Staff members at Ripley Road Nursing Home are assisting residents with the fair, and relatives of residents are lending a hand.

The fair will be held on the grounds at 25 Ripley Road.

COMPARE.

Smart shoppers always compare prices before they buy. And they're not fooled by offers of so-called "free" gifts, which they know that they'll probably end up paying for through higher prices. Keep this in mind when you shop for packaged goods, and you won't go wrong.

Compare these low prices with what others charge!

Carillon recitals will continue every Sunday

The 57th season of summer carillon recitals in Cohasset is being given this year with programs played every Sunday afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock through September 27.

Guest artists from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, New York and Connecticut, as well as Canada, will take part in the series.

The carillon, located in the tower of Saint Stephen's Church, high on the rock ledge overlooking the town Common in the center of the Old Village, is known as the Jessie M. Barron Carillon. It was given in Mrs. Barron's memory by her daughter, Jane Wallis Waldron Bancroft, long a resident of Cohasset, and is recognized as one of the world's finest of such instruments.

It is comprised of 51 cast bronze bells, built by the bell-founding firm of Gillet and Johnston of Croydon, England. At the time of its installation, it was one of the first carillons in the western hemisphere, and it is the oldest in this country in continuous use, with summer recitals dating back to its dedication in 1924. Kamiel Lefevere of Belgium was its first carillonneur.

At the time of each recital, printed programs having notes about the artist performing, and a description of the instrument are distributed free of charge. The summer series is under the direction of Earl Chamberlain, carillonneur of Saint Stephen's Church.

Carillonneurs for the fifty-seventh season are: June 21, Earl Chamberlain, Cohasset; June 28, George Matthew, Jr., Stamford, Conn.; July 5, Earl Chamberlain, Cohasset; July 12, Beverly Buchanan, Bloomfield Hills, Mich.; July 19, Edward B. Gammons, Hingham; July 26, Sally Slade Warner, Andover; and Aug. 2, James R. Lawson, New York, N.Y.

Also, Aug. 9, Richard M. Watson, Cincinnati, Ohio; Aug. 16, George Matthew, Jr., Stamford, Conn.; Aug. 23, Janet Tebbel, Philadelphia, Penn.; Aug. 30, Timothy Hurd, Gates Milles, Ohio; Sept. 6, Edward B. WHAT CAUSES BACK PAIN?

Aside from headache, backache is America's most common health complaint.

Mr. Jones' car was bumped from behind. He suffers back pain. Mr. Miller lifted a heavy box at work. He suffers back pain. Mrs. Boswell is expecting a child. She suffers back pain.

Not all back problems are due to severe strains or dramatic accidents. There are times when a relatively innocent act such as stepping off a curbstone or lifting a pencil from the floor is sufficient cause for back pain. Unexpected, awkward and off-balance movements of any kind can cause back paint and sciatica. This is because the paint may be the sympton of a spinal disorder compounded by structural weakness.

Pains of mysterious origin may be caused by spinal insults. Sometimes the symptons of the back problem appear immediately, allowing the victim to correlate cause and effect. However, causing the victim to seek treatment for conditions other than the causative spinal disorder.

Persistent or recurring aches in the lower back and limbs may suggest a possible lower spinal or pelvic problem. This often requires a structural correction of the cause in order to relieve the condition. Although drugs may hide the pain temporarily, the spine and sacroiliac must be aligned to its proper position for normal function.

If you suffer from back pain, it would be wise to consult your Chiropractic Physician. He has made a special study of conditions related to the saroiliac, spine and nervous system. He seeks to not only locate the problem and give relief from symptons, but also to correct the fundamental cause as well as offer preventive, rehabilitation, and maintenance counsel.

Hey, boys, your mother wants you...

By Lois Martin

Don't you think it's time to call Mother? Haven't the boys of summer been left alone to squabble long enough?

I believe, based on years of experience in settling fights among boys, that the resolution to the baseball strike will come only after Mother intercedes. And as you may have noticed in news clips and photos, no woman has been brought forward to be the impartial negotiator between the players and the owners.

As I understand it, and adult sophisticated corporate gamesmanship isn't a breeze to get a handle on, compensation's the thing. The owners want something or someone as a treat, bonus, compensation, from another owner, if a player leaves the squad just when the owner's brought him along to stardom. Players don't want that 'cause if the owner gets more, he'll get less.

PATCHES

Typical prize in the favorite cereal box feud. Players and owners, privileged as they are and used to getting what they want, each want the cereal box with all the good stuff written on the back and the decal like they've been wanting in the bottom of the box. Possession of the box insures possession of the treat.

There are, of course, background issues to consider, like who had the prize last time, who ate all the cereal when the other one was sick last week...and so on.

Let's understand what Mother would do here. First off she'd send the lawyers home. In this case they represent the neighbors' kids, the friends, who after prolonged arguing has been endured, seem to complicate settlement rather than expedite it.

Mother would hear both sides of the story first. She's a natural for fair play...for about 10 minutes. But after she's learned again that there are always two sides to the story, she loses interest in who's right and who's wrong, judges them both at fault and moves to other action. She's heard the arguments of the boys, both of whom have jaws jutted out in defiance and tears of injustice welling up.

Once it's determined that sharing is out of the question, she'll use other measures. "If the fighting doesn't stop," she'll say, "neither one of you gets the cereal." And what's more supper may be at stake. She'll remand the players and owners to go outside to fight. That's after physical movement begins. I always liked the creed of one mother of sons who said her boys couldn't upset her till she saw blood.

There's almost blood trickling over the baseball strike. They've been at it a while. And they need to be told to find something else to do...or face grounding. One interesting difference between boys who fight and their adult counterparts, is that senses of humor are often sharpened in combat of the adult male.

That's why when we saw George Steinbrenner and Rusty Staub both being interviewed, they were fairly nudging one another in shared jest as they debated their opposite positions. Little boys don't equivocate. They deal with the enemy with a single mind.

That's why Mother usually uses her best and final weapon...And I don't mean "Wait till your father gets home," because that's saved for rank cards.

No, the most brilliant negotiating move a mother has is to separate those who fight. She refuses them the privilege of being together. She washes her hands of the issue, disinterested in the injurer and the injuree and proceeds to ignore them and the problem.

Separated by force from one another, the players and owners are left to themselves. And as when they were little boys, they'd likely be reminded how much they choose to be together.

Scrap the kiss and make up theory. Deny them the right to be together because they can't get along. Send them to their rooms or on errands or directly into hardcore housework. But they aren't to talk, play or be together. There's something about the players and owners that's been spoiling for a fight. They've been dying to get the strike going, choose sides and have at it.

But it's the wise Mother, and only she, who knows they ultimately want to be saved from it. And the matter of saving face is assured when they are no longer allowed to be together by an authority figure, Mother.

That experienced negotiator is an artist at knowing when to search for fair play and when to call off the quest for it and the entire ball game if necessary.

So go get Mother quick! As soon as she takes care of the players and the owners, we'll be free to enjoy real sports.

from the kitchen

Cooks who brave the briny deep must be very ingenious, for to them falls the task of producing hearty meals to satisfy the hunger pangs brought on by the sun and salt air. Anyone who ranks as galley chef is aware of the guests who dangle a fishing line, wallow around in the water, or just bask in the sun, inevitably work up gargantuan appetites. Though Margaret Ward's recipe makes three dozen cookies, it may be well to double it for these

SOUR CREAM CHOCOLATE COOKIES

2 c. sifted cake flour
1/4 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. soda
2 tsp. baking powder
1/2 c. butter or margarine
1 c. brown sugar, packed [M uses light brown]
1 egg
2 sq. chocolate, melted and slightly cooled
1 c. sour cream
1 tsp. vanilla
1 c. coarsely chopped walnuts

Sift together dry ingredients and set aside. Cream butter or margarine with sugar until light and fluffy. Add egg and beat thoroughly. Blend in melted chocolate. Add dry ingredients alternately with sour cream, ending with dry ingredients. Beat until smooth after each addition. Stir in vanilla and nuts. Drop by tsp. on greased cookie sheet. Bake at 375 degrees for 10 to 12 min.

In these days when simplicity and informality in meals has led to many a cookout, Dad is presiding at the grille, while Mom supervises, having already prepared her contribution. This recipe can be prepared as a casserole, or if you don't want to heat up the kitchen, as a range-top special. Here is Rita Carey's

CREAMY CHEESE POTATOES

1 1/4 c. milk
1 8 oz. pkg. cream cheese, softened
1 T snipped chives
1/2 tsp. instant minced onion
1/4 tsp. salt
4 c. cubed, cooked potato [4 medium]

In medium saucepan, over low heat, blend milk into cream cheese. If necessary, beat smooth with rotary beater. Stir in chives, onion and salt. Add cubed potato. Stir carefully to coat. Turn potato-cheese mixture into 1 1/2 qt. casserole. Sprinkle with paprika. Bake in 350 degree oven for 30 min., or cook in saucepan over low heat till heated through. Serves 5 or 6.

Sunny sea breezes waft away any thoughts of calorie counting. Time enough for that come winter. Dog days have come early this year, so early, early in the morning may be the only time you feel like slaving over a hot stove to make these cookies of Margaret Ward's called

OLD FASHIONED WALNUT SOUR CREAM COOKIES

2/3 c. butter
1 c. sugar
2 eggs
1 tsp. grated lemon rind
1 tsp. grated orange rind
1 T lemon juice
2 c. sifted all-purpose flour
1 tsp. baking powder
1/2 tsp. soda
Salt to taste
1/2 c. sour cream
3/4 c. chopped walnuts

Cream butter and sugar together. Add eggs, lemon rind, orange rind and lemon juice. Continue creaming till light and fluffy. Resift flour with baking powder, soda and salt. Add to cream mixture alternately with sour cream. Stir in chopped walnuts. Mix well. Spoon by tablespoonful onto greased cookie sheet. Sprinkle with additional sugar and decorate with walnut halves. Bake at 350 for 15 to 18 min. Yields 2 doz. cookies.

Angler's corner

The Division of Fish and Wildlife is taking it on the chin from the state legislature and stands to lose $700,000 under budget cuts approved by the House and Senate.

The reduction will severely restrict trout stocking programs next year and will probably eliminate the Division's successful sea run trout program in the Jones River. Other programs will be cut back as well, and it is probably too late to do anything about it, the new budget having won approval. If you want to complain, call your state representative.

On the brighter side, fishing is still productive in the salt despite the approach of the summer doldrums. They come along with the heat and mean you ought to do a little thinking before you drop line. Such as...fishing the outgoing tide when chasing bass or blues from the beach...fishing at night or early in the morning (good surfmen sleep during the day)...using the right lures — a surface plug at night and a swimming plug in the day.

...Giant bluefin tuna are beginning to populate the deep waters off Provincetown, attracting rod and reelers, harpooners and handliners. This is serious fishing which promises good fun and good bucks for those who succeed. Several fish have already been taken, but the big catch is still a couple of weeks away.

...Should your angling goals be more modest, may we suggest some pickerel fishing at your favorite pond. Pickerel are good fighters on light tackle and aren't that tough to catch. They can be taken near the surface — pads and pickerel, as the saying goes — or down deep as we discovered last week while chasing largemouth bass in a Plymouth pond. The bass catch was meager, but we did get 30 pickerel using plastic worms.

Bluegills and pumpkin seed sunfish are also deeper now and should be fished for near the bottom in 10 to 12 feet of water. Perch are a snap to catch most anywhere, though you'll do best fishing the early morning. Use a worm and fish it just off the bottom. Jacob's Pond, from the roadside on Route 123 in Norwell, is always a productive perch place.

Many salt water anglers are interested in breaking records, but it won't mean much if officialdom doesn't know about it. For information on getting in the record books, write: the International Game Fish Association, 3000 East Las Olas Boulevard, Fort Lauderdale, Fla. 33316. Tell them, we told you.

...If you are having a terrible time with striped bass this year, we suggest you hire a charter boat to show you the way. Some of the best striper fishing in the world is in the rips off Martha's Vineyard; to get there, call the Falmouth Chamber of Commerce and ask for a charterboat captain. You can thank us later.

Tip of the week: Small minnows found along the sandy shores of most ponds can be netted and make an excellent bait for calico bass and yellow and white perch. Keep the minnows well aerated and they will last all day.

Appropriation approval for commuter boat

State Sen Allan McKinnon this week announced final legislative approval of a $299,000 appropriation for operation of the Hingham-to-Boston commuter boat.

Senator McKinnon has been instrumental in originally obtaining state support for the commuter boat service several years ago. The funding for the coming fiscal year will enable the Department of Tranportation to maintain the current level of service and prepare for future improvements in and upgrading of the system.

"The Hingham commuter boat has proven to be a viable transportation alternative for many South Shore residents who otherwise would have to choose among the Southeast Expressway, Route 3A and the MBTA, which provides only limited service on the South Shore," said McKinnon.

Penn. Central land for sale, Town is negotiating to buy

By Patricia Desmond

Penn Central is taking all offers for the 27 acres that make up the abandoned right of way.

The town will get the land, however, if the price is right.

Should the town negotiate a sale, the land could be used to expand the municipal parking lot, to provide ground for the new sewer mains needed if the new treatment plant goes through, and to create a ribbon of bike paths.

Wayne Curtis, who works for Penn Central Properties, said he spoke with Arthur Clark, selectmen's executive secretary, Monday morning about the possible sale.

Curtis ordered for sale signs placed on the right of way in town to gauge the interest in the land. He has eight letters expressing interest on file so far.

"If the town doesn't act on the sale, then the other offers will be acted on," Curtis said.

The right of way stretches from Hingham to Scituate. It was once the Old Colony line. It went into mothballs as Penn Central's property in 1958 but it had been having hard times for 20 years before then. The old line went from Greenbush to Boston, stopping in Cohasset Village.

After Penn Central closed the line Scituate bought the land in its town. And Cohasset dickered about following suit.

Scituate uses its old railroad right of way as the main sewer interceptor line and for bike paths.

Curtis said he would be discussing a figure for the Cohasset land with management people in Penn Central's headquarters.

He began working in this area for Penn Central last October, disposing of unwanted property. He knew nothing of the background of the old railroad line or the previous details of negotiations that broke down.

Clark said the price sought by the railroad in the past was out of sight. They wanted $20,000 an acre, which works out to $650,000 all together.

The price currently under discussion is unknown.

Clark said the new man employed by the railroad seems willing to negotiate. Until recently the railroad refused to come down on its asking price.

"He indicated they would consider another amount," Clark said. What that amount might be is still a secret.

While commuter rail service is the trend of the future, it would be impossible to reactivate the old Greenbush line. Grade crossings (over the roadways) would be expensive to restore and, of course, the sewer line under the Scituate right of way puts that property out of the question.

Exec. Secretary Clark comes 'home'

Arthur Clark is back in his regular place in the selectmen's office. The only difference between his place in the office today and that of the past 12 years is his job title.

Today he is executive secretary. But people around the Village still think of him as the town father.

The former selectman had served the town in various capacities over the last 44 years. He did not run for reelection this spring.

The vote on the appointment was two to one. Selectman Mary Jane McArthur favored the appointment of a woman from Rochester.

Twenty or so residents sat through the long list of correspondence on the selectmen's agenda last Wednesday, waiting for the much discussed appointment.

Donna McGee, who pushed through a resolve at town meeting calling for the appointment of a screening committee to deal with the elimination of candidates for the executive secretary's job, sat silently and watched the vote.

The resolve, which has no weight in law, was ignored by the selectmen who did the screening themselves.

When the vote was completed, one resident went to the phone in the outer office to relay the results.

McArthur began discussion by saying she would move Julia Enroth, a Rochester selectman, be appointed. She listed lengthy qualifications for her choice and suggested a one-year contract be offered at a salary to be agreed.

There was no second. Still McArthur pushed for a vote. She was the only board member in favor.

William Weeks is new town moderator

William Weeks was appointed moderator by selectmen last week.

Weeks, an attorney with offices in Boston, replaces David Place who resigned to take a position in the Reagan administration. Place is general counsel to the Air Force.

Weeks is a former state senator.

Selectman Henry Ainslie said there were three persons who indicated interest in the post. One withdrew on learning the names of the other candidates. Ainslie said the man was not a lawyer.

The other candidate still under consideration when the vote was taken was Louis Eaton.

Craftswoman — Elizabeth Tierney shows off crafts she made to sell at last week's sale at the Ripley Nursing Home.

A warm affair on Ripley Road

Josephine Milligan stood in a cardboard booth on the lawn of the Ripley Road Nursing Home while children pitched nerf balls at her face.

Three balls for a quarter.

A few paces away a patient sat quietly selling chances on an afghan. Chances were three for 50 cents.

Another patient sat in the shade eating a hamburger and talking with a young relative.

The annual fair at the nursing home seems to bring out the best in people — the staff, the patients, their friends and the public.

Emma Locke, activities director, sold knit goods and talked about all the work that had gone into preparing for the fair.

The fair provides money for the patients at the home to go on outings. Mrs. Locke said they did very well Saturday. Now there's money for a boat trip, lunch at the Greenhouse and more.

There are 22 patients at the Ripley Road Nursing Home, a large white building at the corner opposite the Osgood School.

There's not much space in the yard for the sort of activities usually found at a fair. And many of the older people who came to support the effort had some trouble walking on the uneven lawn.

But the activities were geared for the space. Mrs. Thelma Harrold, administratrix of the home, baked pies and muffins for the bake table. The nursing home cook did quite a bit of baking, also.

Mrs. Harrold was pleased with the turnout. Workers kept busy despite the high temperatures and humidity. Mrs. Harrold was responsible for putting together the white elephant table.

Five of the patients worked on the actual sales. But Mrs. Locke pointed out that every one of the patients worked to provide the merchandise.

The five sales workers from the home were Mrs. Catherine Sargeant, Mrs. Rose Rizzotto, Miss Gertrude Vozella, Mrs. Ruth Whelton and Mrs. Elizabeth Tierney.

Shortly after noon the jewelry was marked down, to half the already low prices. One 11-year-old girl walked off with two pair of earrings for 50 cents.

"I can't believe I could buy these," she said smiling widely.

Meanwhile Miss Milligan took more abuse back at the pitching stand.

She said she was selected as the scapegoat because she's director of nurses.

"Everybody hates the director of nurses," she joked.

Most of the youngsters who tossed the nerfs at Miss Milligan managed to hit her and win a dime store prize. Whistles and other toys suitable for party favors were awarded to the children whose aim was straight.

Cohasset's week

Musical at Swim Center

Cohasset Swim Center will be using town hall from August 16 to 22 for rehearsals and performance of a musical production.

Selectmen are waiving the fee but say each case for use of the hall will be considered on its own merits. The organization paid no fee last year either

Selectmen on the 'T'

Selectmen want the town out of the MBTA. They voted to put themselves on record last week amidst the knowledge that the new budget contains an escape clause for towns like Cohasset that have received no MBTA service over the past 10 years.

Martha Gjesteby, who represents the town with the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, asked for the board's opinion last week.

The escape in the budget calls for a referendum question on the next state ballot.

KoKo Island sign

It took the appointment of a special town counsel to handle the decision, but KoKo Island Restaurant, in the old Ground Round building on Route 3A, will have the sign its owners want.

Building Inspector James Litchfield said he didn't know whether KoKo Island could have a sign similar to the one put up under a zoning variance by the Ground Round. The Ground Round sign was larger than the bylaw allows.

So he asked for an opinion from town counsel.

But town counsel and the assistants connected with Blake Thaxter's office decided against rendering an opinion due to possible conflict.

Last week selectmen appointed Atty. John McNabb, whose office is in Scituate, to handle the matter. By Friday McNabb had ruled the variance could apply to KoKo Island and Litchfield released the sign permit.

Meanwhile the management of the restaurant is pulling permits for renovations to the inside of the building. Litchfield said the only changes to the exterior being considered are a possible new entryway from the rear parking lot into the restaurant and an enclosure where there is now an overhang at the front entrance.

No Towing

There will be no towing for parking violators this year. The request for money for signs, needed to legalize the system, was tabled by selectmen.

Dump security

The auxiliary police will not police the dump.

So enforcement of the newly required dump stickers is left up to the workers at the landfill.

Town officials are still trying to find an alternative to the enforcement problem.

'Sleazy' soliciting

A resident complained to selectmen last week about constables soliciting advertising without town permits.

She termed the solicitation a "sleazy set up," pointing out the constables involved had no identification. She was called in the morning for an ad, later that day two men arrived to collect her check.

"I still don't know if it's reputable. The police didn't know anything about them," the woman said.

CCC preps for fall

The Community Center of Cohasset is in the process of finalizing its fall programs.

As in the past, many of the course offerings will be taught by local residents who have a special field of interest or expertise which they would like to offer the community.

Anyone who wishes to be included in the fall program may send information on their proposed course, their background and salary requirements to the Community Center of Cohasset, 3 North Main St., Cohasset, 02025 by Aug. 1.

Unfortunately for Miss Milligan she had come to the fair in the early morning coolness. She wore a heavy sweatshirt throughout the hot afternoon.

But she didn't faint and there were no visible bruises.

As the fair closed someone decided to help her out by wetting down the nerf balls.

"Five gallons of water in each ball," she joked.

Mrs. Locke thanked everyone who helped, besides the staff and patients, that included local merchants who donated prizes and the people who came to the fair.

Selectmen set guidelines for executive secretary

The new executive secretary will be working on an extensive list of tasks in the coming year.

The following list was prepared by Selectman Mary Jane McArthur as a guideline for the position before Arthur Clark was appointed last week.

The rest of the board accepted her suggestions, except for the details on labor relations. Chairman Henry Ainslie said he thought that part of the outline might conflict with the authority of the personnel board.

He also cautioned Selectman McArthur not to expect the tasks to be completed too soon.

The outline of the job includes:

I. Office Practices and Procedures — the ability to recognize and implement proper office procedure which would include:

A. Keeping accurate town records.

B. Preparing the agenda for meetings which would include a summary of important matters to come before the Board at any one meeting.

C. Providing support services to the Selectmen such as material needed to document and reinforce the town's position on any issue and to aid the Selectmen in the decision making process.

D. Maintaining a filing system which would include cross-referencing.

E. Instituting a procedure to record daily calls, inquiries, correspondence.

F. Instituting a procedure to process mail, answer correspondence, and deal with complaints.

G. Maintaining a file on up-to-date job descriptions and personnel records.

H. Maintaining a maintenance record of all town property.

II. Personnel Management and Labor Relations — the ability to foster good relationships with town employees and to recommend to the Selectmen sound and consistent personnel policies.

A. Keeping the Selectmen informed of changes in the laws governing labor negotiations.

B. Maintaining open lines of communication with town employes.

C. Providing the necessary documentation on all personnel matters to come before the Board.

III. Communications —

A. The ability to promote communication and cooperation between elected officials, town boards and committees.

B. The ability to write clear, concise reports and memos for the Board and the general public when necessary.

C. The ability to deal with the media in a manner which will promote the reporting of accurate and complete information to the citizens of the town.

IV. A Capacity for Innovation — the ability to be creative in approaching unique problems and possibilities for the town. For example:

A. To be able to give input to regional projects because after all, for towns to be able to function effectively under the mandate of Prop. 2½, regional solutions to problems may often be the way to go.

Arthur Clark comes 'home'

Selectman Rocco Laugelle then nominated Clark.

"I believe his experience, knowledge of the town and how it operates qualifies him. He's been in a number of departments, I think he would be the man for the job." Laugelle said.

Ainslie seconded the motion.

McArthur asked whether discussion would be allowed. She asked Laugelle how he could nominate Clark given Enroth's background.

Laugelle said Clark's experience was in the town of Cohasset and every town is run differently.

"She has good references but to me, for a job of this nature, I think a person of Arthur Clark's calibre is needed to do the job. We know he has done the job, whether we like Arthur or not," Laugelle said.

Clark has been putting in 40 or more hours a week in the selectmen's office from 1972 until the time he left office. Since then he has volunteered on a part-time basis.

After the vote McArthur asked what salary Clark would get. Ainslie said Clark indicated he wanted $18,000 during the interviews of finalists.

"We could get him for $16,000," McArthur said. The salary will be between $15,000 and $20,000.

Ainslie said the salary should be negotiated with Clark.

After the decision was finalized, McArthur said she would like a list of tasks for the first year of the executive secretary's job placed in the minutes.

The board agreed unanimously on the list.

Early the next morning Clark was in the selectmen's office, going over the list with McArthur. He began officially on Monday.

What of the windfall?

The town expects about $140,000 more in state aid than last year.

Now the question is: what should the town do with the unexpected windfall.

This year's town budget was down $180,000 from fiscal 1981. We're in fiscal 1982 now, you all know. If the cherry sheet figures reflect this talked about increase (and that might not happen, if the governor vetoes the local aid portion of the budget or the regional charges for the town go up), then it would be possible to restore most of what was cut out of the budget.

We think that would be an ill-conceived venture, not at all in the spirit of Proposition 2½. Here in Cohasset there have only been a few issues that have brought out dissatisfaction with the decisions made to implement Proposition 2½. We think that's enough reason to let things stand and use the money for property tax relief.

The biggest cry over the cuts rang out when the selectmen decided to turn out a third of the street lights. You can see that decision is in some sort of limbo.

We suggest some small amount be added to keep needed lights on. Turning off the lights is false economy for anyone whose property is vandalized as a result.

Selectmen Chairman Henry Ainslie said the board will discuss the issue again soon and make some decisions on the lighting.

Aside from the lights, we think tax relief is the way to go.

Deserving

Arthur Clark got what he deserved last week.

He's put in thousands of hours volunteering for the town in the past 44 years. Now he can rest assured he'll be compensated for the next thousand hours he gives.

The townspeople got wnat they deserved too, an executive secretary who knows the town well and will serve it as best he can.

If there had been an election for the executive secretary's job, the outcome surely would have been the same.

Arthur, at 73, has been giving the town his wisdom and experience for so long it would seem quite a different place without his fathering.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur, probably the most organized politician in town, compiled a list of tasks to be done to guide the new executive secretary along the way.

Arthur, in his typical fashion, was in the selectmen's office the morning after his appointment going over the list with Mary Jane. His official beginning on the job was Monday.

We wish him luck in his new job.

Letters

Says Studds, approach simplistic

To the Editor:

Your July 15 edition carried an article on the recent appearance of Congressman Studds at the Cohasset Town Hall. If I may, I would like to comment on the two matters that he discussed.

First, Mr. Studds said that he was disturbed by the simplistic approach of President Reagan to defense of the nation. In reality it is Mr. Studds' approach that is simplistic.

Our defense in virtually every category of military hardware has been weakened in the past few years, as opposed to the massive Russian buildup detailed in many newspaper reports. Mr. Studds' solution to the huge shipments of arms and ammunition into Central America by the Soviet Union, Cuba, and other communist countries is an amazingly simplistic one: cut off military help to El Salvador.

But, it is a documented fact that the Soviet Union intends to subvert and overthrow the governments of Central America and Mexico, and use these areas to stage attacks, both missile and conventional, against the United States. Contrary to what Mr. Studds says, we should do all we can to help these nations to defend themselves.

The second point in the article I would like to address is Mr. Studds' curious ignorance about the funding of Planned Parenthood. It is even more curious when one considers the wild charges about the "obscene profits" of the oil companies that Mr. Studds has repeatedly made in the past.

He claims to be well informed about the financial status of oil companies but I very much doubt that he knows what he is talking about.

For Mr. Studds' information, Planned Parenthood, which claims to be a private organization, in reality is a well-financed, powerfully backed, elitist group which receives over $100 million a year in federal, state, local, and tax-exempt foundation funds. It is promoting abortion, sterilization, and permissive sex, not only in the United States, but in many other nations around the world.

Sincerely,

MGM could start the onslaught

To the Editor:

It is fine for Fred Benninger, chairman of the board of MGM, to say MGM wants only one casino in Hull and North Adams. However, MGM is not the only company in the casino business. What about Bally, Resorts International, Del Webb and the others? What do they want?

Surely no one can expect they will sit quietly back and let MGM take over the Massachusetts market. Common sense dictates that they will want a piece of the action themselves. After all a casino in Hull will be centered in one of the largest population regions in the country. Think of the potential pool of customers.

What I worry about is the onslaught we are about to face. Supposedly MGM has allocated $5 million to get its casinos approved in Massachusetts. Multiply that by two, three or more times, when the other casino companies enter the battle to get approval for their casinos. We won't know what has hit us. MGM is just opening a floodgate.

If one has any doubts about how these approvals are obtained, I'd suggest they read "The Company that Bought Boardwalk" by Gigi Mahon. It details how Resorts International opened Atlantic City to gambling. It is a pretty gruesome tale.

And what about the state of Massachusetts itself? Are we expected to be naive enough to think that Massachusetts can change its laws to accommodate only one firm, and be able to exclude others. Obviously they will cry 'unfair monopoly' and insist on their rightful share. And where will they want to put their operations? The Cape, Springfield, the Berkshires, Hull? Your town? Who knows? Are we ready to open the floodgates and face the inevitable deluge?

I for one think this matter deserves a great deal more study before any gambling legislation is approved.

Sincerely,
Rita Strong

Welcomes casino wholeheartedly

To the Editor:

As a summer resident of Hull for over 50 years, I have seen the town deteriorate from a vibrant summer family resort to the largest welfare community in the Commonwealth. The reasons for this require a lengthy dissertation which I do not care to approach. Regardless, my family and I will continue to live here no matter which direction the town will take simply because we all love this beach. With this as an introduction, I feel I am in a privileged position to air my observations on the notorious casino project in Hull.

Casino gambling in Massachusetts can be equated in principle to the volatile abortion issue. You are either for it or against it. There are no gray areas. I am not directing my comments to those who are opposed to gambling on a moral issue. They are entitled to their opinion, as I am mine, for it is a personal matter. Instead, I would like to direct my attention to those who are confused by all the publicity this issue has stimulated. You can correctly assume by now that I welcome gambling whole-

Super Mom on strike!!!

By Patricia Desmond

When we left you last week, Super Mom had just gone on strike.

We take you now to the scene of absolute filth and junk food, the home of the striking Super Mom.

"You haven't done the wash this week," Gosh said, with all the accusative anger any 10-year-old can muster when there are no bath towels and no clean shirts.

"Well, you have two choices. You can do the wash yourself or you can wear a dirty shirt," Super Mom said calmly. "Don't you realize, I'm on strike."

"Mothers can't strike," July said, finally realizing the magnitude of the problem.

"I'm not doing the wash again until my conditions are met. In fact not doing the wash may be one of my conditions," Super Mom said.

"Dad, Dad, she won't do the wash. I told you she wasn't doing the wash this week," Gosh ran off, twirling his lasso over his head, rushing toward where ever it was his father was supposed to be.

"Pick me up, uppey," Mit said, cute as any child under three.

In a few minutes, Beloved walked into the kitchen, the lasso strung loosely over one arm. Gosh was firmly attached to the end.

Super Mom was sitting at the kitchen table, breakfast dishes from three days sat in front of her. She was reading a book of poems by Sylvia Path. Another book by Robin Morgan was nearby, just waiting for her attention.

"Gosh tells me you're serious about this strike thing," Beloved said, a tone of incredulity moving through his mouth.

"I got the idea from the baseball players," Super Mom said.

"But they're striking for something important," Beloved said, pulling at the lasso.

"We're out of glasses, Mom," July said.

"I don't care," Super Mom looked back at her book. Inside she realized she was bluffing and that they probably knew she was bluffing.

"We'll just have to go to MacDonald's for breakfast too," Super Mom said, not looking up.

"I want a glass of orange juice," Wren said.

No one said anything for a hesitation.

"Your father will get it if he wants you to have it," Super Mom said.

"All right, I'll get it," Beloved said, moving toward the refrigerator. Gosh twirled the lasso again, beginning his bid for his father's attention.

"But what is this all about," Beloved moaned.

"I told you I was tired of doing all the housework. You all were supposed to help but no one did — well, that's too harsh, no one did help very much," she replied.

"What do you want from us," he asked, with resentment.

"Your energy," she said. "I'm not going to clean ever again unless you all help equally."

"How much will you give me to help," Gosh put in, rubbing his hands with anticipation of a chance to make a killing.

"If your father pays you to do housework, I expect to be paid too. That is of course, unless you do all of it," Super Mom said.

"Okay I won't do any work then," Gosh said.

"Fine, neither will I," Super Mom said.

"I don't like work," July said.

"I want some more juice," Wren said.

"Uppey, uppey," Mit said. "I like to work. Can I use that sweeper thing?"

"Can I talk too," Beloved said. His voice still steeped in anger, frustration and other negative tones.

"I said I want more orange juice, Daddy," Wren interrupted.

"Enough. How can you go on strike and leave me with this chaos?" Beloved wanted to know.

"Well, I read a story about baseball players wanting to stay free agents and it seemed like something worth going on strike about."

"Matter of fact, if I were you, Beloved, I'd go on strike with me. We can keep our bedroom clean by ourselves, lock all four of them out f it, go out to dinner and breakfast and see whether the MSPCA finds out we won't wash the clothes and sterilize the dishes.

"Maybe in a week or so July and Gosh will learn how to load and unload the dishwasher. Maybe they won't.

"The worst that could happen is we could go into the ant farm business."

All four children complained at once. The dog barked. The gerbil rotated around his rodent cage. The cat purred at the gerbil.

And Beloved and Super Mom decided to set up a chart with chores to be divided as evenly as their ages allowed. They did it with trepidation and screams of their children's agony.

The legacy of winter

By Paul Steven Stone

I was sitting on the floor, eye level or thereabouts with my three year old. For some reason, it came to her that Daddies need affection too, so she began stroking my shoulder, intoning softly, "Nice Daddy. Good, good Daddy."

In such a moment the weight of parenting falls cleanly away, and with the husk thus gone, the fruit seems especially sweet.

It was clear to me that for all her faults, her many shrieked-out tantrums, her numerous illogical passions, my daughter Katie was basically a good person — a good human being.

Katie's goodness as I saw it was not an amalgam of Christian virtues, but rather the goodness that exists in all things as a potential for perfection. The goodness of a flower in full scent, the goodness of a woodland silence broken only by the call of birds or the rush of a nearby stream. The goodness of a moment in one's life that is grasped with intelligence and unabiding thirst.

Such goodness, I'm convinced, lies solely in the natural order around us, and to the extent that we can incorporate that order into our lives we will likewise imbue our world with goodness.

Children do not need to be taught to laugh, to run, to stop and look at butterflies. Their capital of imagination can't be easily exhausted. They've come fresh from the factory and none of their parts have yet been lost or damaged. We parents who see ourselves as molders and creators are nothing more than benign caretakers. Our task is not to turn lead into gold, but to craft beautiful things from the gold we've been given.

Sitting on the floor, staring into my daughter's serious and loving expression, it was easy to focus on the unbridled purity that ran through all her actions. Usually, I was too distracted by the dross to notice the gold to which it adhered.

In that moment I felt thankful. Interestingly enough, my gratitude seemed to leapfrog across a span of three generations, towards a lovely old woman in Virginia. She is my daughter's great-grandmother, a woman of great spirit and loving demeanor. As is natural for someone her age, Nanny's body has become an easy victim for a host of recurring maladies, and her worsening condition is a cause of concern for all of us who know her.

Looking at Katie, and thinking about her as I was, I felt grateful for the legacy of love and proper care that had been transmitted intact from one generation to another, from Nanny to my mother-in-law to my wife and, now, to our daughter. Each had nourished and cared for her child so that the goodness within could flourish. God willing, Katie would inherit that legacy and one day pass it on to her children.

It's not unusual to fix on the sad implications when someone you love is in the winter of her years. You forget that there have always been winters. More importantly, you forget that the true value of winter only shows up in the seasons that follow.

If you're lucky, however, you don't forget. You sit on the floor, watch your daughter make nice to you, and think to yourself, "Good work, Nanny. Good, good work."

They will be leaving soon for their honeymoon in West Virginia and then on to Virginia where they will make their new home.

'Recurring' yard sales will attract attention of Cohasset police

By Loretta Hoch

There's going to be a crackdown on yard sales coming up — for the recurring kind.

Police Chief John DeBassio points out yard sales are a violation of bylaws and zoning ordinances. In some places they are a way of fencing stolen merchandise. And they cause traffic problems.

The chief is drafting a proposal to the selectmen asking to require permits for yard sales and limit the number allowed to two a year at any house.

Yard sales fall under the category of junk dealing and that requires a license, but the police have been overlooking that problem.

"To enforce a ban on yard sales would be as futile as trying to outlaw bake sales and lemonade stands," Sgt. John Rhodes explained.

Chief DeBassio said there aren't enough men, money or time available to the police department to track down every garage sale in town.

But they are concerned about the potential problem.

Rhodes said, "As people realize that there might be a couple of dollars worth of stuff under all the dust and dirt in their attics, it only makes sense to sell it. Nobody's business is threatened if the family makes a few bucks and neighbors can take advantage of some great buys."

But what about the more ingenious entrepreneurs who recognize the potential for operating a thriving little business under the guise of an impromptu yard sale? Currently, there are no specific bylaws in Cohasset pertaining to yard sales, and the absence of any overhead costs, rental fees, or taxes makes for a tempting pure profit enterprise. Apparently, some Cohasset lawns are harboring such venture, and police are now studying means of flushing out these operations.

Chief DeBassio explained that some locations have been sponsoring sales on a regular basis, and he emphasized the importance of "establishing a distinction between the one-shot deals, and those persistent sales that are actually a mechanism for a regular business."

The chief anticipates that one method of regulating such operations would be the passage of a bylaw mandating permits be obtained for private sales. Such permits would provide a means of limiting the number.

According to Hull Chief of Police Donald Brooker, the banning of advertising has successfully limited the size and frequency of yard sales in the town. "On the other hand," said Brooker, "Unless there is a complaint, we have no qualms about people trying to get rid of their excess property."

The opportunity to use yard sales as vehicles for the distribution of precious metals or stolen goods represents a genuine concern to the chief.

DeBassio stated, "I will be addressing law enforcement interest in the sale and purchase of precious metals, given the possibility that some yard sales have become outlets for the disposition of stolen goods."

However, until the police and selectmen implement a strategy for the regulation of lawn sales, Cohasset's present laissez faire system invites anyone with a lot of junk and a little business sense to earn an extra nickel.

heartedly and will forward my views on the subject. But first, I would like to comment on some of the obvious objections put forth by the opposition. Once again, I repeat, I cannot speak for the country nor the state regarding casino gambling. These are simply my conclusions as I see them.

Two of the most negative reactions have been crime and prostituion; a most natural objection. If you have frequented the casinos of Las Vegas or the islands, you are aware that it attracts those who enjoy the thrill and excitement of gambling. The casinos there are well run. They must be in order that these gamblers return. The losers are not able to lose more than they have in their pockets and the big winners in turn are protected. The casino is able to do this with a sophisticated credit system check on the gambler and the tight security force employed by the casino. If a gambler loses all his money, he does not go out into the street and rob for additional funds. You can compare it to the successful, trouble free Las Vegas nights found weekly throughout the South Shore. Gambling in Massachusetts has become a sophisticated enterprise as proven by the Lottery and Bingo games, and in turn, so has the person who wants to gamble.

If a gambler would like female companionship, that should be his perogative. He doesn't need a casino. With a beach and 27 bar rooms in a 1/4 mile stretch, the quality, availability, and discretion of a prostitute here is not considered a four star attraction. I feel the word "discretion" on the part of the gambler, the hotel casino, and the woman involved says it all on this subject. In addition, they will be totally removed from the community which is not the way it is at the present time.

As for equating Atlantic City with Hull, it is a ridiculous comparison. Atlantic City has been and still is a convention city that is geared to service large groups of people. The six or seven casinos already there with more to come, thrive on the most part on a different element of people. True, many locals do attend, but the recent problems that have arisen there are due to a totally unequal atmosphere. A one casino concept as they have in many cities throughout Europe does not have a negative effect on its community. In effect, it's just the opposite. And as for the reports that the casinos are loosing money presently, it is not a factual statement. They may not be making as much as they did at first but what does it matter as long as they honor their commitments and produce a handsome windfall of new funds to the host town.

When I read that some people are concerned that the presence of a casino will influence the young, the minimum age of 20 handles that very easily. Does the fact that there is alcohol in a household create an alcoholic among the young? Those that intend to indulge will do so no matter what the safeguards.

One valid point the opposition has evoked is the possibility of an increase in automobile traffic. I cannot dispute that nor do I even care for the thought of it. However, when one takes things into its proper perspective, we will find that the bulk of the gambling would be done in the evening, just opposite to the heavy beach traffic generated by a hot summer day. And once the casino begins to function, my town will begin to upgrade in a normal unfolding process. In turn, hopefully, many of these bar rooms and amusement centers will be replaced with more profitable and attractive buildings. In this manner, Hull will be relieved of many young rowdies in search of fun and excitement which has imposed a severe drain on our local police and the courts. I am willing to endure some inconvenience while I wait with anticipation for that day to arrive.

I think I have covered most of the main objections to a casino in my town. Now I would like to put forward some concepts as to why a casino in Hull would be a positive move.

First of all, the 78 million dollar complex will be an entity unto itself. Most people frequenting it will remain in the immediate area except those with their families who would like to explore some of our historical sites and natural beauty. In addition, not only won't a casino displace any homes or people, but due to its location it won't even change the complexion of my town.

A restaurant, exclusive shops, tennis courts, perhaps a small golf course cannot but be an asset to any area and other modern innovations in other parts of Hull will follow. The town fathers are aware that outside investments are absolutely necessary in order to revitalize the area. The Small Business Administration will attest to the fact that their funds once made available to us due to the big storm of 1978, helped many home owners upgrade when given a chance to do so. No community in this day and age can afford to turn away the additional resources of this growth.

Another point that to my knowledge has not been touched upon is that one casino will only be able to hold just so many players. No way will everyone be able to be accommodated. When that happens, the casino will be forced to raise the minimum on its tables so that the small bettors cannot participate. That should placate those who are concerned that the welfare recipients will lose their checks.

I have neglected to mention other matters that have been talked to death, such as lowering the tax rate, money returned to all the communities in the state, and facilities to transport people from Boston by boat and by bus. Those with more information than I can support those positions better, as well they should.

I forward these opinions which reflect the thoughts of the vast majority of the summer residents of Hull, but who have not taken the time nor the effort to make them known to the parties concerned. I know there will be some who will take issue with some of the statements I have made, but if common sense can prevail, and if the proper safeguards are built into the casino bill that I know have been already done by our legislators, their concerned constituents will be properly protected and enhanced.

Sincerely,
Jack Silverstein

CACG cites problems that accompany casinos

Carol Oteri, president of Citizens Against Casino Gambling, has stepped up her campaign to inform the public about the unanticipated problems that accompany casino gambling.

"One thing we learn from the track records in Atlantic City and Las Vegas," she said, "is that casinos are the breeding grounds for an assortment of social problems."

Quoting published statistics she added, "Nevada, in addition to having the highest alcoholism rate in the country, has a suicide rate more than double the national average. Since the casinos opened in Atlantic City there has been a three-fold increase in the number of people seeking help from the local Gamblers Anonymous chapter."

She continued, "One New Jersey legislator has criticized his state for spending 'millions to promote gambling but not one penny to help those who become addicted to placing a bet.' He insisted that a state which encourages gambling and has legalized it and promoted it, should contribute substantially to solve the problems of compulsive gambling."

Stating her affection for the family oriented neighborhoods now in Hull and her concerns for her own teenagers, Oteri noted, "According to an official of Atlantic City's Health Department, the advent of casino gambling has even caused teenagers to become more involved with gambling. The minimum legal age in New Jersey to enter a casino is 18, but students as young as 14 years of age are known to have gambled at casinos in Atlantic City, from testimony given before a committee of the New Jersey legislature."

Commenting on the overall situation in the New Jersey resort, Oteri said, "If things have not gone well for Atlantic City's longtime residents since the introduction of casino gambling, newcomers in search of 'glamorous' jobs have fared no better. Social service agencies blame the particular job-related stresses, high speed life style and personal associations of the casino 'industry' for the alarming rate of family problems plaguing casino employees. People come looking for the 'good life' and end up saying 'good grief'."

The Hull resident listed other by-products of casino life to be a distorted sense of values, unrealistic attitudes toward money, a cheapening of values and attempts at assorted mental gymnastics in order to cope with some of the unpleasant realities of the casinos.

The anti-casino activist summed up her feelings in this way, "After reading New Jersey newspapers I have to say that that state bears a striking resemblance to a drowning person as it struggles to stay on top of all the corruption and crime in Atlantic City. Loan sharkers, hustlers, sleazy operators of all sorts and so-called businessmen with telltale ties to organized crime appear to be rising from the ocean like sea monsters."

Zeroing in on organized crime, she said, "Some people try to dodge this very real issue by saying that the only ones who really get hurt are the mobsters knocking each other off as they corner a piece of the action. But there is no way that you can ignore the fact that in the end it is the average person trying to make a living as a small merchant who is bled by the mob if he doesn't 'go along' with their demands."

Drawing attention to recent history Oteri remarked, "Casino-related wheeling and dealing figured prominently in the ABSCAM expose. New Jersey's casino regulations are said to be as restrictive as can be and that state is still plagued with problems."

In an effort to learn from the experience of Atlantic City, Oteri said, "People who have swallowed the 'one casino' pitch should remember that New Jersey's Commissioner of Public Safety reported a 25 per cent rise in Atlantic City in the rates for assault, robbery, car theft and prostitution after the opening of the FIRST casino."

She concluded her remarks with, "Ignoring facts doesn't change them and leaves you poorly prepared for the future.

Chapman still leads Flying Scott Fleet

Peter Chapman and crew mate Steve D'Onofrio continue to hold a dominant first place lead in the Flying Scott Fleet series race.

Chapman's boat is in first place after nine races in the 15-race series of the summer.

Chapman won Saturday's six mile race held in Cohasset Harbor, the fifth win for Chapman this summer.

After nine races, the race for second place is tied.

A boat owned by Chet Ellis and Roger Porter is tied with a boat owned by Ray Kasperowicz. Each owner has won two races.

Terry Young's boat is in third place while another boat owned by Peter Goedecke holds fourth place.

The rest of the league standings are owners Dave Croninger-Rob Henry, fifth, Bob Smith, sixth and co-owners Peter Conway, Dick Horn and Gerry Schultz, seventh.

In the race Saturday, Kasperowicz and his crew mate of Bob Davenport placed second, Porter and Ellis, third and Terry Young and his crew of Christine Barrett and Regina Schultz placed fourth.

The six-mile race involved a lot of "close reaching." Chapmans's boat led the final 2½ legs of the race. The boat owned by Porter and Ellis managed to break loose of Young's cover in the last leg of the race to finish in third place. Kasperowicz's boat showed exceptional speed on the reaches.

Cable study committee coming

Soon the town will have a cable study committee, according to Peter Pratt, whom selectmen sent to represent them at a cable meeting in Hingham last week.

Pratt will have a presentation for the board at their meeting at town hall on Wednesday, July 29.

The meeting was held at a private home in Hingham where a small group gathered to discuss the possibilities of cable. A representative from the Hanover Cable Study Committee was among those sharing information.

One of the main points in the meeting, according to Pratt, was that the selectmen don't have the power to refuse to consider cable applications.

He said the state cable commission would have the right to take over the licensing process for the town, if the selectmen were to refuse to entertain applications.

The task of studying cable is massive, Pratt said.

Only a few licenses have been granted in the South Shore area. None of the cable systems are operational, although the Plymouth system is well along the way. Licenses have been approved in Weymouth and Marshfield.

The selectmen's office has seen some interest in the area of cable licensing. Yet officials in the industry say it would be unlikely that the larger companies would be interested in taking the franchise unless a regional system was involved.

Estimates indicate the cost of cabling Cohasset would be in the neighborhood of $1.5 million.

To run a cable system rates must be competitive with what is offered in nearby communities, according to the cable industry.

Murray votes 'aye' on the budget

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, (R-Cohasset) voted favorably for the 1982 budget. This is the first time in five years Mary Jeanette has voted for a state budget.

This year, the budget took a giant step toward ceasing the practice of extra jobs, special projects and other items that cost the taxpayer many extra tax dollars, she said. "It will cut a number of duplicative state agencies and offers a more sensible approach to Government than any previous state committment to the taxpayers.

"The budget offers $265 million in local aid which was overwhelmingly confirmed by both the House and Senate and should be a good start in solving the fiscal problems of the 1980's. I felt this was the closest compromise to the Better Budget submitted earlier in the session," Mary Jeanette said.

Mary Jeanette has filed "Sunset" legislation each year and is pleased that a "Sunset" section is included in the budget.

"I am delighted to see Cohasset removed from the MBTA assessment and that County Advisory Boards will now approve County budgets rather than the legislature. I am also very pleased that Elderly Services Corporations Home Care and the Meals on Wheels programs were not deleted from the 1982 budget."

Rep. Murray is a member of a Committee consisting of legislators of the 22 towns which receive no MBTA service but must still pay assessments. She added Hull, along with Cohasset for the assessment removal when the subsidy for Hull was removed this year.

"In my first legislative term representing Cohasset and Scituate I filed legislation to remove these towns from the MBTA Assessment," said Murray.

Murray will file legislation next year to remove Hull from the MBTA and to reduce the assessment on Hingham.

Eclipse

By Patricia Desmond

The moon,
eclipsed by soft shadows, demanded the woman
give full attention.
So she walked
by the black, lapping sea, listening to the sound of her heartbeat, listening to the voice of her sister sea.
The moon
cast a thin spotlight across her ocean.
Back in her bed,
a man slept,
her man.
His only fault,
she said to the moonbeams,
is he is gentle,
so gentle it's hard to know what thoughts flutter in his mind, hard to tell when he's lonely.
The shadows of the eclipse moved like a B-rated movie interrupting her flow of concepts and footsteps.
She sat on the cool sand, waiting for an answer from the moonglow.
She wondered why her man wasn't with her in the darkness.
She wondered what he hoped he might become someday when they both grew up, someday when his gentleness would be tempered with cold seawater, someday when her flighty ramblings would be through, doused in seawater
and the cold light of the moon.
She tossed a rock into the mouth of her sister sea.
The sea said, "Kerplunk" and slapped a wave onto her toenails.
She moved back,
and kept on wondering, wishing he were a night person wishing he would come out with her in the darkness
and sit by the edge of the sea.
In her bed
he dreamed on and felt lonely, he dreamed she were a day person, given to picnics in the sun and noon time kisses, he dreamed she would lie safe, secure by him in the darkness.
The moon moved on with its eclipsing shadows.

The Arts Page

There will be a new feature in the Mariner, appearing regularly — an arts page.

We all know there are many accomplished artists, writers, poets and musicians who live in town. The arts page won't ignore these people who already have a measure of success.

But as a community paper, the Mariner's focus is on art generated by people who haven't yet been given the recognition they deserve.

Art news will be sprinkled on the page, as will be poetry, original artwork, reviews, short stories and the like.

Contributions may be left at the Colonial Pharmacy in the Village, or mailed to the Mariner, P.O. Box 71, Cohasset, 02025, or call Patricia Desmond, editor, for arrangements.

Material will be returned if accompanied by a self-addressed envelope.

Trade Museum to teach guiding techniques

Aesthetics, creative problem solving, teaching and guiding techniques will be covered in Milton's China Trade Museum new fall docent training course.

Curator of Education, Jane Gaughan, in announcing registration procedures for the special three-week course for new volunteer guides, stressed that, "learning and teaching, through training and guiding, offers both personal satisfaction as well as an immeasurable contribution to the institution."

Closely related to increased activity at the Museum, the new docent training course responds to the need for more volunteers to participate in its programs. Following an introductory meeting Wednesday, Sept. 9, the course will meet at the Museum on successive Mondays in September.

Special "topic" training will be conducted by the staff as well as by guest lecturers. Bi-monthly get-togethers throughout the year will augment the initial curriculum content.

Registration for the fall course is limited and must be made by Aug. 21. For information, please telephone Mrs. Sheehan, executive secretary, at the Museum, 696-1815.

WATERCOLORS BY GRACE LAWRENCE
Few watercolors can stand black and white reproduction. The work of Grace Lawrence, member of the South Shore Art Center, comes through vividly because of her use of strong colors. One of her art works can always be found in the member's gallery at the center. This month she has a display at the Hingham Library. Grace works as an advertising artist for Jordan Marsh.

'Chic' to cheek's the game...

By Lois Martin

Bet you can't find someone without one. Well, maybe you can, but it won't be easy. Because almost everyone is playing the elitist fad of the 80's. The Designer Game. A little green alligator on a shirt. A big A on the right shoe. The GB initials on the sleeve, not to mention a designer's entire name on the rear end of britches.

It has become middle America's chance to feel special, a bit more prosperous than we did with Penny's. Savvy manufacturers have learned if they say it's a designer product, put someone's name on it, we buy it. I'm beginning to wonder if the real Gloria Vanderbilt is a woman in some factory that stitches seams.

PATCHES

Probably our ability to play designer has been due in part to stores which deal in the "discontinued" and "irregular" goods. I was in one of those last week shopping for a husband and found myself in the men's underwear department, reading initials on sassy lower body wear. You take your average man in a summer suit and you can wager beneath that conservative garb, he's sporting an insignia for Oleg Cassini.

And they've even got designer shoe laces to go in Nike sneakers. I'm getting the feeling I wear other people's clothing. There's a Sasson tag on my summer tee shirt and I'm trying to resist getting a Liz (Claiborne) tagged dress on sale.

I've considered getting some "Lois" tags and sending them to those people whom I advertise when the price is right. Let Diane Von Furstenberg go around with my name on her rear end for a while. Or for a better swap, she could have LPM on her nightie if I'm to have DVF script initials on mine. The designer jeans game is the one in which I've failed. I'm well aware everyone in town has those except me. Many designers make them so that you either have to have anorexia or buy a size 18.

But I'm going to take advantage of this craze, use it for personal gain. Middle class people want to play with the good stuff and my family's no exception.

I'm going to sock a Bill Blass tag on my washi machine. There's a Pierre Cardin label for t lawnmower. And I can arrange for a vaccum clean by Ralph Lauren. How about a Halston paint brus a bold Gucci stencilled on the chain saw.

There's no end to the possibilities. Feature t fight over my broom when it gets an Aign signature with a matching "A" on the dustpan.

But I'm most excited about the improvemer pending in my bathroom. Things will turn around there as soon as I get a Calvin Klein tag for the t cleaner. Feature a Halson label on my dirty cloth wicker basket which has hitherto been missed aimsmanship or ignored.

And for the circular lid on the primary facility, I' ordered an alligator, with IZOD written all the w around it. They won't be able to resist putting down.

But this fad won't last forever. Levi Strau started it all. But there'll come a time it'll t fashionable not to have someone's name on o pockets. Till then, though, I'm with it. But it's n always easy looking around that Bausch & Lom label on my contact lens.

New England weather such as it is, this heat wave could be long gone by the time you read the column. However, it being 10 a.m. and 92 degrees and my fingers sticking to the typewriter keys, it's hard to wax enthusiastic about eating anything that isn't chilled and easy to prepare. Amy Davis writes this is the sort of fare she and her husband enjoy on a hot summer's night. It serves six, about 1 cup each and is called simply

CHICKEN-FRUIT SALAD

3 c. chicken, cooked, cut in chunky pieces
3/4 c. celery, chopped
3/4 c. grapes, red, halved and seeded
20 oz. can pineapple chunks in natural juice, drained
11 oz. can mandarin oranges, drained
1/4 c. pecans, chopped
1/4 c. salad dressing
1/8 tsp. salt

Toss first six ingredients together lightly. Gently mix salad dressing and salt with chicken mixture and chill. Serve on lettuce leaves and garnish with pecans.

We can seldom get enough salads, whatever the weather and there's hardly a vegetable garden that isn't producing these greens faster than we can eat them right now. Rarely is lettuce canned, frozen or otherwise processed, so it's a challenge to keep ahead of one's crop. Classified as a herb, "Gourmet" magazine offers this recipe for

LETTUCE AND CARROT SOUP

In a large saucepan bring 4 c. chicken broth to a simmer. In a skillet saute 1 c. shredded carrot in 2 T butter for 1 minute and add to saucepan. In the skillet saute 1 pound Boston lettuce, trimmed, rinsed, patted dry and shredded, and 1 c. chopped scallion including the green tops in 3 T butter for 1 min. Add mixture to the saucepan. Stir in 1 c. sour cream, 1 1/2 tsp. salt, 3/4 tsp. chervil and pepper to taste. In a small bowl whisk 1 c. of the soup into 4 egg yolks and stir the mixture into the remaining soup. Heat soup until hot, but do not let it boil. Ladle the soup into a tureen and serve it hot or chilled. Serves 4.

Soon we'll be faced with the annual onslaught of tomatoes, with friends, neighbors and comparative strangers begging us to relieve them of a few. Fortunately, there's a multitude of ways of preparing tomatoes and one that is found everywhere in Spain and more than welcome here in hot weather is

GAZPACHO

In a food processor or blender (in batches) puree 4 tomatoes and 1 cucumber, all peeled, seeded and chopped, 1 onion and 1 green pepper, both chopped and a garlic clove, crushed. Add 2 c. beef broth 1 1/2 c. tomato juice, 1/4 c. each of olive oil an red-wine vinegar and salt and cayenne to taste. Spi the machine briefly to combine the mixture, transfe to a bowl and chill for at least 4 hours. Stir th gazpacho to recombine it, ladle it into mugs or bowl and garnish each serving with 1 tsp. each of peeled seeded and minced cucumber, lightly salted an drained for one hour, minced green pepper, mince onion, peeled, seeded and chopped tomato and smal croutons. Serves 6.

Cucumbers are a glut on the market right now. Lovely to look at, actually, they are a fruit, almos always treated as a vegetable. "Cukes" were brought to the New World by Columbus and are one of the oldest fruits grown, about three thousand years old. Ann Mason's recipe make 2 cups of this

COLD CUCUMBER SAUCE

In a colander toss 1 pound cucumber, peeled, seeded and grated with 1 T white-wine vinegar and 1 tsp. salt. Drain 30 min. and squeeze dry. In glass bowl combine cucumber, 1 small onion, grated, 1 c. sour cream, 1/2 c. heavy cream and 5 T lemon juice. In food processor puree the mixture and add 1/4 c. fresh dill, 2 garlic cloves, minced and salt and pepper to taste. Chill for at least 2 hours and serve with fish or poultry.

Angler's corner

The summer doldrums arrive and once again, bluefish have come to the rescue.

No need to cruise about the Race or other exotic points to the south now; the blues are among us and are being taken everywhere as they chase pogies in close. Last week they were taken from shore off Hull, Cohasset and Green Harbor where they pushed pogies onto the beach and caused swimmers to leave the water.

The water bubbles with life and death when these mauraders of the deep trap baitfish close to shore. Pogies leap for safety pursued by blues weighing eight to 14 pounds. Overhead, sea gulls swoop down low to grab the pieces. It is a summer happening that will be repeated again and again along the coast.

Fishermen who happen to be at the right place at the right time need only a surfcasting rod and a Rebel at the end of a wire leader. Actually any lure would do in these situations; just be sure to bring the gaff. Offshore, trolling will produce around Minot's Light and at the mouth of the North River. Hoochies, Rebels or livelining will work. If you opt for a pogie or a mackerel, wrap a hook around the tail as well. Blues often gobble from the rear.

If stripers are less abundant, blame the blues. When they move in, the bass become scarce. Pollock are around though, and flounder are always there for the taking. Cod are better if caught deep. In close, they are of softer and sometimes wormy flesh.

... Trout fishing is still worth a try on the Cape if you go deep. Last week we found them scattered in 30 to 35 feet of water in Ashument Pond, Falmouth. They were rainbows and were willing to accept the corn we used for bait. Took a few smallmouth bass as well.

... Whitman's Pond in Weymouth has been producing some good largemouth keepers lately. Last Friday night one came in at six and a half pounds.

... Senior citizens must be 70, not 65, to qualify for a free fishing license. Sorry about the goof....To date, 509 Atlantic salmon have been reported traveling up portions of the Connecticut River. About 320 were captured at the Holyoke Dam and 286 were stripped for their eggs.

... Even fish abhor the gypsy moth caterpillars. We have seen several sunfish come to the surface to take a free-floating caterpillar, only to spit it out....Despite the Whitman Pond's catch, you'll still do better with largemouths in the early morning (4 to 7 a.m.). Over the past three weekends we have caught both largemouth and smallmouth bass before breakfast. Our best successes have come with spinner baits on the bottom. Last week we used a perch colored plug to catch a 5 lb., 1 oz. smallmouth from Lovell's Pond.

... Tip of the week: Catfish (hornpout) like soap and turtles don't, so get yourself some effective and cheap bait by cutting a bar of soap into small cubes. They give off a soapy trail that catfish will follow. Even better, cut a sponge into small cubes and place them into a jar along with some scraps of meat and fish. Let the whole thing sit for a week and voila...your presoaked sponges will make great bait for catfish. No kidding.

Columbarium to be built at Central Cemetery

Directors of the historic Cohasset Central Cemetery, one of the oldest burial places on the South Shore, are moving forward with plans to create a memorial facility believed to be unique on the South Shore.

This new facility will be a "columbarium," a repository designed specifically to accommodate urns containing ashes, in those cases where the deceased or families chose cremation.

Although such facilities have been constructed in other parts of the country and in connection with large city cemeteries, it is believed that this will be the first on the South Shore.

"We have had increasing inquiries for urn burials and have only very limited extension possibilities," Arthur Nilsson, president of the cemetery board said. "Through the far-sighted efforts of my predecessor, the late Prescott Cumner, we learned of such facilities in the New York area. Under Mr. Cumner's leadership, we conducted a careful investigation and determined that this would be a most welcome and appropriate addition to the cemetery."

Because of Mr. Cumner's role in the project, the columbarium will be dedicated to and named for him.

Mr. Nilsson explains that the word "columbarium" derives from the Latin word "columba," meaning "dove." The designation arose out of the similarity in appearance of some of these facilities to dovecotes with their niches for nests of the birds.

The new facility at the Central Cemetery, however, will be quite different from those which have resembled dovecotes, or in many cases, are like post office boxes or safe deposit vaults. The attractive design, contributed by architect and board member Irwin Matthew, is in the form of a U-shaped garden wall, 18 inches high, to be constructed of seam-face granite and capped with individual bluestones covering 42 niches; each will accommodate up to three urns.

"We believe the design will not only fit in extremely well with the country setting of the cemetery, but will actually provide a most artistic addition to the beautiful grounds," Mr. Nilsson says. "We are most grateful to Mr. Matthew for his thoughtful and sensitive creation."

A contract for construction of the columbarium has been let and it is expected that work will begin before the end of July, with completion scheduled for the early fall. Inquiries about reserving space in the facility may be addressed to Norman Dresser, 6 Joy Place, Cohasset, 383-9836.

The Cohasset Central Cemetery is situated at the corner of North Main St. and Joy Place, north of Cohasset Common; it overlooks and slopes down to Little Harbor. It dates back to the very beginning of the 18th century, with some doubt remaining as to the date of the first burial there.

Although for many years it was thought that the earliest grave is that of Sarah Pratt, wife of Aaron Pratt, who died July 22, 1706, subsequent information has indicated that the oldest stone in the cemetery is that of Margaret Tower, wife of Ibrook Tower, who died Nov. 19, 1705. Stones in the cemetery memorialize members of original Cohasset families, including Bates, Beal, Kent, Lincoln, Nichols, Pratt and Tower, among others.

The cemetery is also well known as the burial place of survivors of the Irish immigrant ship St. John, which was wrecked on Grampus Ledge off the Cohasset shore Oct. 7, 1849 with a loss of 99 lives. The ship, out of Galway, was carrying more than 100 persons fleeing the potato famine in Ireland. In 1914 a large Celtic cross was erected by the ancient Order of Hibernians on a knoll overlooking the ocean to commemorate the tragedy.

Originally the cemetery was owned by the town. During the mid-19th century it passed into ownership of the Central Cemetery Association. More recently it has been incorporated as a non-profit organization. At present it contains about 500 graves and there are about 200 known lot owner-members. There are now only six available grave sites and a very limited adjoining area that might be suitable for extension.

Officers and directors of the Cemetery are: Arthur Nilsson, president; Drexel Gibson, vice president; Edward Tower, treasurer, superintendent and collector; Dr. Edward Woods, clerk; Robert Booth, Jr.; Daniel Cotton; Norman Dresser; Mrs. Donald Evans; Irwin Matthew and Raymond Remick.

These artifacts are part of the exhibit at the Cohasset Maritime Museum. It's worth the trip.

King vetoes 'T' pull out

Gov. Edward King vetoed legislation Tuesday that would have allowed Cohasset and 21 other towns to escape the MBTA and its ballooning assessments.

The veto came Tuesday afternoon and though it must be considered as gloomy news, it does not sound the deathknell for those unserviced towns, like Cohasset, that are trying to leave the MBTA District. The veto may face a constitutional test, according to House sources, and it will definitely be the subject of an attempted legislative override.

Gov. King has also vetoed legislation that would provide a subsidy to the Hingham Commuter Boat.

Both pieces of legislation were a part of the new state budget that received approval by the House and Senate last week.

Expanded water commuter service sought

By Patricia Desmond

Some high powered pressure is working on a plan to quadruple the water taxi business from the South Shore to Boston.

Cohasset's Representative, Mary Jeanette Murray, said she's working with U.S. Reps. Brian Donnelly and Joseph Moakley to bring $10 million to Massachusetts to buy boats to operate between Hingham and Boston. Some of those boats would head for Logan Airport, while the majority of the water commuter traffic would shuttle from Hingham to Boston.

"It's in the future," Rep. Murray said, "but with a program in place we have a better chance."

That program — for Mass Bay Lines — just lost its state subsidy. Gov. Edward King vetoed the line in the regular budget recently and again Monday in the deficiency budget.

But the boat will continue to run. The New Boston, which takes just a few minutes more than the Freedom, can manage to operate without losing money with only a small increase in fare.

Right now the boat leaves the Hingham Shipyard on Route 3A at 7:10 a.m. It arrives in Boston about 8:15 a.m., just as it always did. It used to leave Hingham at 7:20 a.m.

The new fare is $2.25 for a one-way ticket or $18 for a weekly ticket. Monthly tickets are available for $60.

The old fare was $1.75 one-way or $15 a week.

Rep. Murray believes there are quite a few people who would use the commuter boat if there were more choices available.

"It leaves so early now," she pointed out. And too, the number of return trips — now one — can only work for people with rigid work schedules.

If the federal government were to come up with funds to purchase fast boats for the commuter traffic, there would be three more boats going in to Boston. The boats would be operated privately under a lease from the state, Rep. Murray said.

The first boat would still be able to leave for Boston early. But the time between the boats could bring the third one up to 10 a.m.

"For someone going shopping in Boston, the commuter boat could be attractive. I know I'd use it if it didn't leave so early and too I can never be sure about being finished at the State House by 5:20 p.m.," she said.

She pointed out that until the legislature recessed, she was leaving far later than that.

Rep. Murray and Sen. Allan McKinnon tried again last week to push through the subsidy for the Hingham commuter boat. About $200,000 was put into the deficiency budget last Friday to subsidize Bill Spence's operation.

That was $100,000 less than in the original budget. Both times Gov. Edward King line item vetoed the amount.

According to the governor's office the decision wasn't a hard one.

"It was something thought out two weeks ago. He just didn't consider the subsidy a priority," a spokesman for the governor's office said. The spokesman, Roy Lyons, took issue with a story in The Patriot Ledger that described the commuters as being gloomy because of the budget reduction.

Facts on Feola not in dispute

There won't be a line of witnesses waiting to testify tonight (Wednesday) at town hall at the hearing over the conduct of Patrolman Randy Feola.

"I suppose you would have witnesses normally at this kind of hearing," Police Chief John DeBassio said Monday. "But the facts are not in dispute. He never denied firing the gun."

Feola received his fourth suspension in three years time last week after he was arrested in Quincy in connection with an incident July 20 outside the Beachcomber. He faces a criminal charge of discharging a firing arm within 500 feet of a dwelling.

The day the charge was brought Chief DeBassio suspended Feola with pay. That same week he held an administrative hearing with only Feola and John Ridge, his attorney, present. He suspended the former police chief's son for five days without pay, the harshest punishment a chief may impose.

That suspension was up Monday. The chief said he and Ridge had mutually agreed Feola would go back on paid suspension, pending the result of the selectmen's hearing.

The chief said the facts will be presented to the selectmen and they will decide the next step.

Some say Feola may take the decision out of their hands. There are reports Feola is considering the idea of resigning or seeking a stress related disability.

Ridge said those reports are just rumors for now.

Does that mean Feola hasn't made a decision?

"It will all come out at the hearing," Ridge said.

Cable TV study pushed

No cable television company has filed an application in town as yet, but selectmen are thinking about appointing a study group anyway.

Peter Pratt will represent the selectmen at a regional meeting on cable television at 7:45 p.m., Monday, August 10, at Hanover Town Hall.

Pratt went to the selectmen last week to report on a meeting he attended the week before in Hingham and to recommend the board appoint a cable television study commission before any cable companies apply in town.

There have been inquiries from officials in Hanover and Hingham into the possibility of a regional cable system that would include Cohasset. The selectmen are the licensing authority for cable television.

Pratt had charted out statistics for Cohasset and the nearby communities. He pointed out that it would be less attractive to a cable company to seek the Cohasset franchise alone. There are 32 miles of street in Cohasset and 2,500 year-round housing units. The density of homes per mile is 78.5 and the income per household is $14,958, the highest in the communities in the area.

Pratt urged selectmen to be careful in setting up a study commission, pointing out that there is a fine line between people who have expertise in the technology and people who have some interest at stake.

"This is unlike any other decision your board will make," he told the selectmen.

"It is most like a liquor license in the process but technically it is nothing like that at all. For the future of the town there is nothing like it."

He warned selectmen that they should be prepared for the process, which they may handle themselves if they choose.

Eviction of the sportsmen

The town has begun eviction proceedings against the Cohasset Sportsmen's Club.

The club — which everyone agrees is small and inactive — has been told to get its building off the town land on Route 3A.

Calling the number listed for Joel Rosano at 151 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, the Sportsmen's Club building, the Mariner found a recorded answering device that never returned our call.

Joel is listed as vice president of the club. He lives in the building "for insurance purposes," he told the selectmen last February and pays $15 a month rent, enough to cover the real estate taxes.

The tax situation is unusual. There is no tax on the land, since the town itself owns the property. There is a tax on the building. The last bill was roughly $200.

Anyway the selectmen were told the club membership is about 10 and the last meeting was last fall.

A call seeking updated information for the Mariner from Joseph Rosano, Joel's father and club president, brought a firm, "no comment."

Cohasset's week

No action on casino bill

The legislature recessed for the month of August without admitting the casino gambling bill, sponsored by Hull residents.

Political observers aren't sure the bill will be considered this year as Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray has been working to keep it out of consideration. All she needs is one-fifth of the House to vote against admitting the late-filed bill.

New car wash coming

Using recycled water, a car wash will open soon on Route 3A, near the Scituate line.

The board of appeals recently issued a decision allowing the car wash on petition of Glenn Salvador.

The business is expected to open next month.

T.M. on Penn Central

There will be a special town meeting this fall and one item under consideration is to be purchase of the Penn Central Railroad property.

The price under discussion is a secret, at this point. Arthur Clark, the new selectmen's executive secretary, is handling negotiations with an official of the railroad.

Selectmen say they will set a date for the special town meeting at their meeting the third week in August.

Ainslie wants lights off

Henry Ainslie, chairman of the board of selectmen, insists some of the street lights must be turned off.

The board had been thinking about turning off a third of the street lights, faced with budget problems and a projected rate hike. A public hearing brought out a large number of complaints. Nothing more has been done about the situation — but a change in the electric company's rate structure made it unnecessary to go as far as planned with the turn-offs.

Ainslie wants the board to tour the town soon to look the lights over at night.

The board's last tour — when the large-scaled changes were planned — was during daylight hours.

Permission for connection

Selectmen last week gave Hingham Water Company permission to open Hull Street for a connection at 43. The permission is for a water service replacement.

Joseph Barresi, of Cohasset, with his wife Vel and their children Paul and Gia, after Governor Edward King administered the oath of office to Mr. Barresi as the state's first Inspector General. The ceremony occured in the Executive Office of the Statehouse.

New lawnmower purchased

After much discussion, selectmen decided to buy a new lawnmower from the high bidder, Campbell of Norwell.

There was $7,000 allotted for the sit-down mower for the tree and park department and that was the bid on an American-made lawn mower.

The low bid was for $5,958 for a Japanese-made lawnmower. The bid was submitted by Turf Equipment of Middleboro.

Heating system bids

Bids on heating systems for the Bates Building and Government Island building will be opened by selectmen Wednesday, August 12.

School officials predict the Yearbook for the Class of '81 will be out within a few weeks.

DeBassio licensing agent

Police Chief John DeBassio will continue on as the selectmen's licensing agent for another six months.

The post was created six months ago at the chief's request for a trial. The board decided without comment to continue that appointment at last week's meeting.

Water meters

The sewer commissioners want to make sure the water meters are working and calibrated properly.

The meters are the only way of keeping track of where water in the sewer system is coming from.

Feola's story, which so far no one has tried to contradict, is that he was cornered by five men outside the Quincy barroom about 1:30 a.m. July 20. He shot a gun, not his service revolver, into the air to attract help. A Quincy police officer on detail arrested him as a result. He pleaded innocent to the firearms charge in district court. The case comes up again Friday, August 7.

Chief DeBassio does not plan to try to prove anything different happened. He said the reason witnesses are not needed is that Feola has agreed he shot the gun.

Feola has never been criticized for his performance while on duty. The other suspensions, which all happened before the current chief was appointed, involved off-duty incidents, a chase in Scituate (he was not the one giving chase), and two driving charges in Hull.

Sportsmen

In fact, it brought two firm no comments. The elder Rosano did not want to name his attorney.

For the town the matter is being handled by John Kirby, assistant town counsel.

Selectmen turned the problem over to town counsel last month after discussing the situation for more than a year.

The Sportsmen's Club was fairly active back 20 years ago. It was about 1964 when the selectmen were authorized by town meeting to negotiate a lease with the club for use of the woodland owned by the town.

That lease never was written out but the club moved the old building it had been able to obtain onto the land.

Officials say the town meeting had been told there would be extensive activities at the clubhouse. Somehow membership diminished over the years.

Officials say the lack of a lease isn't surprising. Little town business was done in formal fashion back then.

The club itself is no longer listed on state records as a non-profit corporation.

Selectmen have talked about reclaiming the town land under the Sportsmen's Club for cemetery land. They have also talked about receiving complaints from unnamed people about the fact that the building is lived in.

A spokesman for the company confirmed that with a slightly slower boat and higher fares, ridership is the same.

McKinnon's office admitted the subsidy was more than needed to keep the operation going but insisted the extra $100,000 was written into the item "in case" a faster boat came along or there was a possibility of getting two boats.

The amount with the added $100,000 was the amount spent last year when the state was keeping the experimental Hovercraft in operation. The Hovercraft, which is used successfully in warmer harbors, proved a failure in Boston.

"Unless we keep the money there, it's going to die," McKinnon's spokesman said.

Still, the limited operation continues.

Selectmen answer probe

Henry Ainslie, chairman of the selectmen, is drafting a letter to Tanna Kasperowicz explaining that Arthur Clark's appointment as selectmen's executive secretary is free from problems with the conflict of interest statute.

Clark who served as a selectman until the spring was out of office several months before his appointment as the board's secretary.

Drug policy

The school system is developing a policy on drug and alcohol abuse.

Actually the committee had the topic on its agenda for this week's meeting, which was scheduled after the Mariner's news deadline.

One of the suggestions put forward by the school administration as a way of coping with abuses is to make each teacher an arm of law enforcement. We are in favor of grappling with the drug problem in the schools. We think the committee is wise to look at the issue as a part of a comprehensive health program.

But turning teachers into auxiliary police officers is going too far.

"The teacher must refer any student suspected of having used drugs or alcohol or exhibiting 'abnormal' behavior to the school nurse, guidance counselor, adjustment counselor, assistant principal and/or principal," the draft states.

Perhaps that's the way to deal with suspected distributors of drugs. Perhaps that's the way to deal with a drug dependent child whose school behavior is affected. But to put the teachers in the position of referring all children suspected of using drugs or alcohol goes far beyond what we consider appropriate behavior for a teacher.

And we wonder about the rights of these youngsters accused by suspicion.

The clause seems too broad for possible enforcement, anyway. It is likely that someone would suspect most of the students at the high school of having used drugs or alcohol some time or another.

Where does that leave a teacher who fails to report a student so suspected? Would that place his position in some jeopardy?

Later on, not too far away from that clause, there's a line that the teacher should be supportive not punitive. We wonder how someone can turn in a child under suspicion of having sipped a beer and not be considered punitive.

School Supt. Eugene Crowell said when he gave out the draft, it was meant to be a starting place.

Well, the real starting place is a policy statement that deals with the basic issue of how tough the new drug policy should be.

Drug abuse is a symptom of a problem, not the problem itself. A health curriculum can begin to deal with the problem. But it is only a beginning.

The school system can hardly tolerate drug use in the schools — something it seems has been going on for sometime. Nor can it fail to invoke sanctions against students caught in possession of drugs or in the process of distributing them on school property.

That doesn't mean creating a Gestapo-like atmosphere where suspicions are the start of disciplinary action.

We hope we were reading the words in the administration's draft too literally.

Cohasset three-piece suit

By Tanna Kasperowicz

Commentary

First of all, I'd like to clear something up.

I never said former Cohasset Moderator David Place wasn't a good moderator. I only said: "Hull Town Meeting Would Eat Him Alive."

Secondly, one of the main reasons I'm asking the State Ethics Commission to check out the process by which Cohasset Selectmen recently appointed a former Selectman to a paying position is because if it's legal, and it appears to be legal, I'm going to write an initiative petition asking our legislators to tighten up our conflict of interest laws, which may or may not be in need of major surgery.

Joyce Schreier's letter to the Mariner Editor last week was well-written, entertaining and provocative. But while it's true that public spirit appears to be dead elsewhere, and especially in Hingham, it's also equally true that public spirit is still alive and kicking in Hull. Over the years I have wondered many times why Hull should have all the public spirit.

Anyway, by now all of us know that Hull's pro-casino VOICE group didn't entertain 200 legislators last week. Twelve showed up. And the 135 volunteer VOICE members didn't raise the money for the Worrick Mansion dinner and bus tour by $3 membership cards and $1 bumper stickers alone. The buses were donated. Early-on in the VOICE campaign I wrote a check for $35...and VOICE has been reassessing me and others like me ever since. It costs money to attend VOICE meetings.

Unlike Ms. Schreier, I don't find it inconceivable that VOICE raised a couple of thousand at its flea market. A friend of mine made $1,200 at hers last month. And that was one family.

The mystery three-piece suited projectionist Ms. Schreier referred to is none other than Cohasset's Ed McMann, former director of the State Bureau of Accounts and presently an MGM lobbiest. I don't think Ed is ashamed of being a lobbiest for MGM. Nor was I ever aware that it was a secret. However, it should be noted here that many Hull residents own and wear three-piece suits.

Because I have been a bad VOICE member in recent months, I'm not sure what nasty things VOICE and CACG are doing to one another at the local level. But I do know that when I called Trisha Corey, arrangement producer of Channel 38, about being on that program recently, she told me the program was for Hull people only.

Lo and behold...who do I see on the Channel 38 show? Maria Plante, Mary Jeanette & Co. from Cohasset. They apparently forced their way in, to the consternation of Trish and Channel 38. Next time I won't be so polite. I'll barge in like CACG.

MGM may or may not be Hull's and/or VOICE's sympathetic favorite at this time. Certainly, MGM has positioned itself favorably. And certainly, MGM, VOICE and labor groups have the same goal...one casino and increased tourism in Hull. But I am not personally aware of any MGM people who have titled positions in VOICE...which meets in peoples' kitchens. I wish Ms. Schreier would name these MGM individuals who are slowly infiltrating the town.

How does Hull raise money for buttons or anything?

A few months after The Blizzard of '78 Hull residents sponsored a Day of Appreciation for the various non-profit agencies which had assisted it during and after the Blizzard of '78. Unlike the State legislators recently, hundreds of representatives and their families attended.

Several months after the blizzard most of Hull hadn't even returned to their homes. Some would never return. During the Blizzard of '78 I happened to be the Hull correspondent for the Patriot Ledger. So I have a vivid recollection of just how difficult it was for these people to throw a party for 3,000 people. There seemed to be nobody around to collect from. The Appreciation Day was held at the Worrick Mansion. Everybody brought a cookie and then bought the cookie back. Games were played on a dusty field. The Marching Pirates performed. The Town somehow raised several thousands of dollars which was ultimately turned over to the Red Cross, etc.

Did the people of Johnstown, Pa. ever do that?

Hull residents are fund-raising geniuses, masterminds of campaign strategy and public relations. During my tenure as Ledger correspondent Hull made me laugh, cry, angry, sad, nervous and want to quit at least once a week. But I never stopped respecting their public spirit. I had to be a reader and researcher of the General Laws in those days, because everybody in Town went around quoting them. The days when I used the law books at Town Hall I invariably had to get in line behind Simmy Hartstone, Claudette Fitzsimmons, Bill Robinson, Bob Burns and Mildred Parent.

Like I said, Hull Town Meeting would have eaten David Place alive.

Echoes in an empty house

By Paul Steven Stone

I can hear the sound even now. No matter that the fan blows steadily and the typewriter hums beneath my fingers. Silence is a sound that can't be covered over by the monotonous churning of machines. Not this kind of silence.

A house so recently bursting with life and noise weighs heavy when the child-sized feet running through it run elsewhere, and the tears and laughs and arguments and games fill a void in someone else's life. No matter that the children and their

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to Jack Silverstein, the Hull summer resident whose letter appeared in the July 22, 1981 edition of your newspaper.

I have lived in this area for almost thirty years and my first reaction to Mr. Silverstein's comments about the "deterioration of Hull" is that the summer residents to some degree should look to themselves!

There is a school of thought in Hull that places much of Hull's deterioration on the fact that there are 2,800 homes out of 4,400 residences that are owned by summer residents. Many years ago, these houses were vacant from September through June, but for the past quarter century there has been an on-going trend to rent these summer houses from September to June. A great number of winter occupants have school-age children, and while the town of Hull was not receiving any extra tax revenue from these houses, it was burdened with the additional costs of education, as well as other town services (e.g. bi-weekly rubbish collection).

Some year-round residents were also converting basements for apartment rentals, and without reassessments of their property, there was a continued strain on Hull's total budget. In 1950, with approximately 4,000 homes in Hull, the school budget was approximately 16 per cent of the entire cost of operating the town. About the time when I moved into this area, the 1958 budget for Hull was approximately $2,500,000 including a school budget of $800,000 (35 per cent of the entire budget).

Because I have been so close to the casino issue during the past eight months, and have researched much data relating to the effects a casino would have — I totally disagree with Mr. Silverstein that "due to its location it won't even change the complexion of my town."

"Zits To You" — Hull's complexion will be blemished, along with the complexion of my town and other surrounding communities!

Evidence of "Casino Pox" comes from many sources, some of which follows:

Mr. S. says — "The bulk of the gambling would be done in the evening, just opposite to the heavy beach traffic."

Atlantic City's best months are July and August. With similar climate, we can expect that those months would be the most heavily patronized months here. With the casinos opened from 10 a.m. to 4 a.m., gamblers are going to pick the hours that suit them, not Mr. S.

Mr. S. says — "Minimum age of 20."

The minimum age in New Jersey is 18. This is also the minimum age stated in Hull's late-filed bill. The Star Ledger of Newark — April 9, 1981 — states: "A large percentage of Atlantic City High School students gamble illegally in casinos." They report that students skip lunch, shop lift, and sell drugs to obtain gambling funds. The Quincy Patriot Ledger — July 25, 1981 — quotes the Superintendent of Atlantic City schools saying: "We now have to deal with issues that three years ago didn't exist: kids gamble, their parents gamble, and we have drugs and venereal disease and employment problems."

Mr. S. says: "Hull will be relieved of many young rowdies in search of fun and excitement." The last commissioner of New Jersey's Casino Control Commission called for federal funds to help Atlantic City fight a "dramatic increase in street crime and organized crime" (The Express, Easton, Pa., May 27, 1981). It continued, "Casino gambling has brought more crime due to a growth in the population and to an influx of tourists occasioned by the new casino industry."

Mr. S. says: "Not only won't a casino displace any homes or people, but due to its location it won't even change the complexion of my town...."

People who can't afford high rents which result from rampant speculation will be displaced. Some people who plan to make a financial killing on their property may find their land taken by eminent domain to make room for widened roads, new roads, a cloverleaf, or even a bridge.

Mr. S. talks about "lowering the tax rate."

If your evaluation goes up, your total tax bill is higher not lower. The report of Attorney General Robert Abrams of New York, who reversed his previous support of casinos, stated: "Another consequence of the out-of-control land speculation has been property tax increases of 300 per cent to 400 per cent in casino areas, imposing intolerable burdens on lower and middle income homeowners."

Mr. S. says: "The losers are not able to lose more than they have in their pockets."

On May 4, 1981, ABC News featured compulsive gambling as a "disease." It told the "horror" stories of compulsive gamblers who follow the same pattern of losing their spouses, jobs, and self-esteem. ABC News told of the one to two million pathological gamblers that lost a total of almost forty billion dollars — almost three times the cost of our first space shuttle — in 1980.

The losers have much more to lose than what's in their pockets — sometimes it is the pockets themselves. Look at Atlantic City police records. From 1977 through 1980, after the casino openings, robberies were up 151 per cent, purse snatchings 158 per cent, auto thefts up 159 per cent, assaults up 179 per cent and larcenies were up 260 per cent.

Mr. S. speaks of "the sophisticated credit systems check on the gambler."

The Star Ledger of Newark, N.J. — May 8, 1981 — relates the story of a New Jersey housing developer indicted on charges of defrauding two Atlantic City casinos out of more than $4.3 million dollars in an elaborate phony credit scheme. The Wall Street Journal — June 22, 1981 — says the "New Jersey regulatory authorities have been filing complaints and levying fines against some gambling houses for sloppy, irregular handling of credit."

"Successful, trouble-free Las Vegas nights"... Mr. S. has obviously not read Boston Magazine's piece on that part of the action. Local bingo night ads carry the phrases "police protection" and "well-lighted parking lots" to hint at just a few of the problems now being tolerated.

Mr. S. comments: "And as for the reports that the casinos are losing money presently, it is not a factual statement."

The New York Times in the June 23, 1981 issue states: "In the first quarter of 1981, the industry as a whole in Atlantic City posted an operating loss of $7.3 million, according to figures supplied to New Jersey's Casino Control Commission."

mother will return. Silence is a sound that won't be dispelled by logic.

Curious how the silence always seems to fall at times of crisis; at moments when the wheels of your mind spin out of control and the thoughts brought up for inspection have the power to cut you down in your strength, to hobble you like a horse set to pasture and forgotten.

To be a writer in our age is a serious offense. To expect to live and feed your family and still develop your craft as a writer is more than an offense, it's a pugnacious affront to a culture that grows every day more cozy with its machines. Look well and long when you next come upon a writer. It's an experience that will soon grow unique.

There are no more than 300 people in the entire country who make a living — who survive — doing freelance writing. They are the ones who outlast the silences; who rise above the insecurities, the roller coaster moods, the guilt and especially the fear. In my house of silence this week it came to me that there must be a better way to live one's life.

Tomorrow Karen and my two daughters return. They'll bring with them the familiar chaos which, in truth, is nothing less than the outer shell of a very sweet fruit. I know that this mood of mine, this great heaviness, will pass to some extent. Even Hamlet would have had to relent in his tragic musings had he but had to face some of the diapers that will soon await my attention.

Still, I wonder about this chosen craft of mine. I love it, but will it keep me and mine alive? How sad it must have been for the blacksmiths when the ashes were finally cold and the echo of the hammer no longer rang in their ears.

All there was ... was silence.

Casinos won't solve unemployment

By Beth Harling

The president of Citizens Against Casino Gambling, Inc., hopes to convince Massachusetts residents that casinos are too "one dimensional" to be of much help, in the long term, in solving the unemployment problems of an area.

Carol Oteri said, "The economy of Massachusetts is the healthiest of all the New England States, mostly because of our booming high tech industries. The outstanding educational institutions in our state provide an important plus for any work of that nature.

"Would most large firms seeking expansion find a casino environment wholesome for their employees to live in and raise children? A Las Vegas resident vacationing in Scituate called me a few days ago to say that she hoped that we would succeed in keeping casinos out so that her husband's upcoming job transfer to Braintree wouldn't force them to put up with here what they hope to leave behind in Nevada. We have files of similar feelings expressed by former residents of New Jersey, many of whom originally voted for casinos when they lived there and learned the 'hard way.'

"We'll scare away the geese who really lay the golden eggs and be stuck with more businesses who hire on a seasonal basis. Atlantic City, with a climate similar to ours, has only two good operating months — July and August. After turning to casinos in a desperate try for revitalization that resort is still trying to find ways to improve its mid-week and off-season business. At best, it is a four month, rather than a year-round entertainment center. Casino backers keep saying that casinos will make Hull a year-round resort. That is exactly what was promised to Atlantic City, too.

"Warren Brooks of the Boston Herald American has stated that 'the bad money' of casino gambling (and all other legalized gambling for that matter) nearly always drives out the good money investments of productive capitalist enterprise." As an example he noted that Nevada, despite its Sunbelt location, 'is the only western state where the manufacturing economy is dead in the water.' He pointed out that manufacturing comprises 27 per cent of Massachusetts employment but only three per cent in Nevada. Finally, referring to the proposed casino in Hull, he stated that 'such a casino would not merely be a mistake, it would be a state-wide economic tragedy'."

As she straightened a stack of New Jersey newspapers, Oteri's comment was, "Atlantic City's casinos promise very uncertain futures for people. Turnover in the 'industry' is called 'phenomenal' by informed observers. The pressures, long hours and short breaks associated with casino employment take a toll on the bodies and minds of these people. A dealer, for example, is one of the casino workers who is always in direct contact with the gambling public. That means that a dealer may also be the first person a disgruntled gambler will vent his frustration on.

"It is a fact that there are far more blackjack, craps and roulette dealers qualified to work than the casinos can provide jobs for. The New Jersey Casino Control Commission said that by the first of this July there would be twice as many dealer school graduates than there are jobs available for them in that state's casino hotel industry. I feel for those who paid the expensive tuition for training only to find themselves in an overcrowded field. How could we ever stop out-of-staters who already have the training from getting the jobs now being dangled before us by pro-casino forces? Most of the jobs created in Atlantic City went to outsiders who flocked there. The casino owners also brought in many of their own trained workers."

Reminded of corroborating information, she said, "A special task force appointed by New Jersey's Governor Byrne to deal with Atlantic City's continuing unemployment problems concluded that, 'despite the infusion of capital investments and increased employment opportunities, the residents of Atlantic City have not been the prime beneficiaries of the area's growth and expansion.' Those people were sold a bill of goods and I don't intend to let the same thing happen here."

The task force's report reads, "This suggests that residents of Atlantic City, who must bear a major portion of the costs of this development, are not sharing in the prosperity it has brought."

Expanding on the similarities between promises made to Atlantic City and those being made to Hull and Adams, she said, "Instead of building a family trade Atlantic City is overrun with the 'bus people,' the chief targets of casino promotions. Such day

Of Chapin, theatre producer, Ronald Rawson said, "I know I speak for his many loyal Music Circus friends and fans when I say we regard his passing as a great loss. He was not only an excellent musical artist but a superb human being as well, working tirelessly for many charities. He will be sorely missed by us all."

Chapin last played the Music Circus on September 13, 1980, presenting a three-hour concert to a standing-room-only crowd.

Snakes at Wompatuck Park

It's not true, "You've seen one, you've seen 'em all." At least it's not true of the Jeff Corwin snake and reptile show featured at Wompatuck State Park this summer.

A Boa Constrictor doesn't look like a Box Turtle and the difference between the little green and little brown snake is as obvious as the name implies.

If you missed Saturday's show at Wompatuck Park Visitors' Center, you'll be pleased to know it will be repeated three more times this summer. For those that did see it, Jeff's promised a surprise or two next time.

Jeff will repeat his performance on the following Saturdays — July 15, Aug. 8 and Aug 22. All performances will begin at 10 a.m. at the Visitors' Center at Womaptuck State Park and are free. Womaptuck is accessible from Rte. 228 in Hingham.

Prince Charming, honey, slouching low on that wooden church bench — talking in quiet brown tones, looking so good with your tattered cool, moving slow
into my wide-screen fantasies.
Where were you when I believed in you?
When I was young, helplessly ingenue — when I thought it would be death-defying to lie back and enjoy your kiss — to vanish into the setting sunshine on your snow white horse.

Casino response

"The plight of casino gambling after three years in Atlantic City is worsening. Most of the city's casinos lost money in the first quarter of 1981, and executives expect profits to be scant through the year."

Mr. S. talks about the "handsome windfall of new funds to the host town."

New York Times — June 23, 1981 — "Three years after the first casino opened, Atlantic City is still waiting for the payoff. Moreover, some contend that the price Atlantic City has paid — in increased crime and greater influence of gaming interests in state and local politics — for its limited economic gain is too high."

And so, Mr. Silverstein, I will continue to fight this "disease" because I do agree with you on one point — We all love this beach" — and don't want to trade it for "Fool's Gold!"

Sincerely,
Mrs. Maria A. Plante

On casinos most say No!

To the Editor:

To an outsider, developments in your town with regard to the gambling casino issue, would suggest some silver is crossing the palms of some individuals. This is not an accusation, merely an observation.

I have talked with literally hundreds of residents of Hingham and Cohasset at the post offices, shopping centers and in private homes and have yet to uncover one person who favors what you are pushing for in Hull.

Obviously you have not read the devastating effects gambling has wrought on Atlantic City and its neighboring communities. It might be to your advantage to read and digest the study described in the enclosed article from the Quincy Patriot Ledger.

Further, your action against our very respected Representative Mary Jeanette Murray is totally uncalled for. She is without doubt the most sensitive to the needs of her constituents of anyone who has ever held that office.

Her integrity is second to none. Her actions are dictated by the mandates of the majority. And on the issue of a Hull casino, the majority is saying, NO.

Frederic Cole
Hingham

[A copy of Mr. Cole's letter was sent to Hull Selectman. Ed.]

He's appalled

To the Editor:

I read your article by Mike Berger, entitled "The Scoreboard Drive Succeeds," with dismay. As you know, one of the hallmarks of fine journalism is accuracy in reporting and editing. The article discusses a fund raising drive to provide a new scoreboard for the town's little league field. You mistakenly identified the field as William T. Barnes Field.

As I, and so many others in the town know, that while then highway supervisor, William T. Barnes, perhaps helped make the little league field possible, it was the many hours and labor of love of the late, Mr. Harold T. Barnes, that gave little league in Cohasset the field it has today.

I for one, was privileged to play little league under the watchful eye of first base umpire, Harold F. Barnes. I am appalled at your reporting and editing.

Very truly yours,
Glenn Pratt
Cohasset

Selectmen checking Davenport complaint

Selectmen are checking into a complaint from Bob Davenport that Bill Signorelli, the town accountant, prevented him from getting the minutes of the session of the board of appeals that dealt with the variance for the sign at the former Ground Round.

Signorelli's family owned the property once known as Signorelli's restaurant.

Henry Ainslie said the old minutes would be public record but suggested the minutes may be in town counsel's office rather than at town hall because of a question on whether the variance was transferable.

Kennel Club match show in Hingham

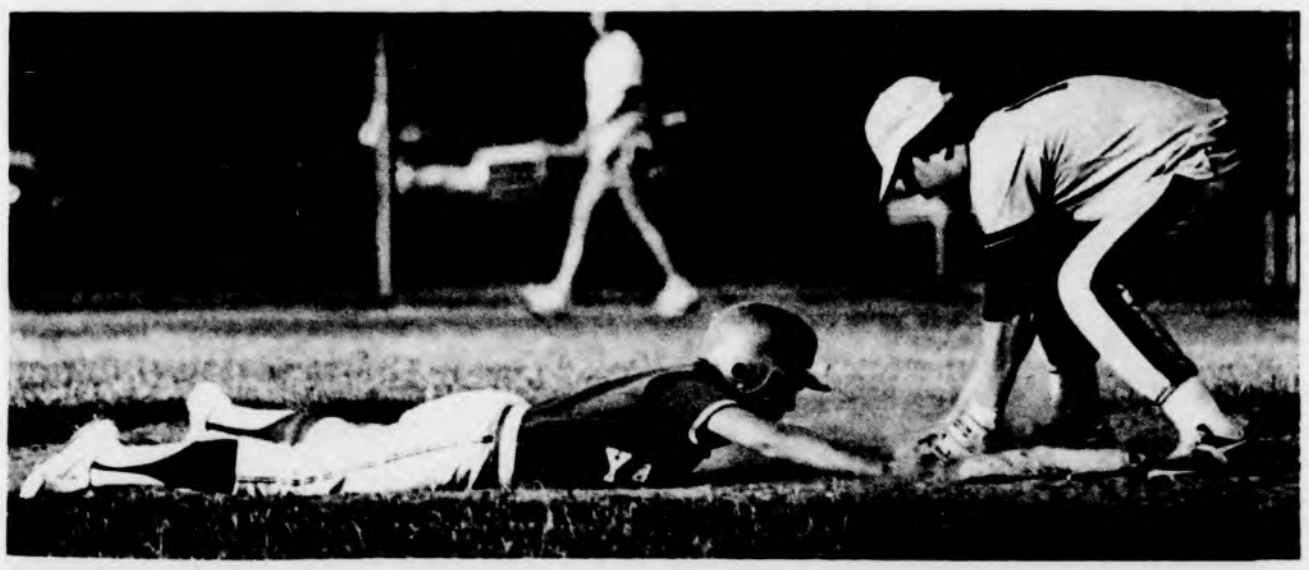
The South Shore Kennel Club will hold its annual AKC sanctioned match dog show Sunday, Aug. 9, at the Hingham High School athletic field — rain or shine.

There will be classes for all breeds of puppies and adult dogs. Ribbons and trophies will be awarded. Admission to the grounds is adults, $1 and children under 12, 50 cents.

Entry fees are per class per dog, $2; junior handling, $2 (as an additional class, $1). Entries will be taken from 9 a.m. until the beginning of judging at 11 a.m.

Bring your family and make a day of it. This is a perfect opportunity to start showing your pure bred dog, or to get to meet, see, and ask about those breeds you have been considering for your next pet. Dogs are excused after being shown, so come early.

The South Shore Kennel Club is a non-profit organization of breeders and exhibitors of pure-bred dogs established in 1945. Proceeds from this match are donated for scholarships in the field of veterinary medicine and to the betterment of dogs.



Troy Chatterton, 14, pays the price of taking too big a lead as he is tagged out at first base in an All-Star League Game at Barnes Field.

Housing market improves locally

The real estate market is in the summer doldrums nationally, but market conditions in Plymouth County are showing an upward trend, reports Ferd Lucas of Hingham, president of the Plymouth County Multiple Listing Service (MLS).

"The real estate market is still very active with sales up better than six percent for the first six months of 1981 compared with sales figures from the same period in 1980," Lucas observed. "Listings are up three percent over last year, but the number of properties sold is down five percent.

"The South Shore is one of the fastest growing areas in the Commonwealth. Unlike other parts of the state that have experienced a complete standstill in new construction, we are finding that new homes are still being built throughout the South Shore and in Plymouth County.

"With the average price of a house rising from $57,567 to $64,307, or 12 percent in a year, real estate remains a good investment for the future," Lucas continued.

"Mortgage money is available, and our realtors are prepared to offer many forms of alternative financing from seller-financed first and second mortgages to variable rate mortgages and adjustable rate mortgages. The conventional mortgage we've dealt with for so long is now a thing of the past," he observed.

Auction planned

The fifth annual auction for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (Mormons) will begin at 10 a.m., Saturday, Aug. 8 at the chapel grounds, 379 Gardner St., South Hingham.

The selection includes the following items: color TV, rugs, washing machine, sewing machine, silver tea service, Hummel figurine, chairs, lawn sweeper, beds, stereo, humidifier, 60 year old cut glass vase, ping pong table, electric stove.

There will also be a white elephant table, and food at a snack bar.

All profits will go toward the new church addition. For further information call Polly Doggett, Cohasset, 383-1847 or Bill Currier of Marshfield, 837-5598.

Boat eviction halted

Bailey Creek will remain the mooring place for 35 boats for the time at least.

Special Town Counsel John McNabb of Scituate said Monday he received a preliminary injunction in superior court last week preventing William Figueiredo from moving any moorings in the creek he claims to own.

The injunction, which was obtained by agreement, will continue until the case can be tried on its merits.

Figueiredo had eviction notices sent out to people whose crafts are moored in Bailey's Creek several weeks ago. He bought two acres along the creek seven years ago and both he and his attorney say he has a case for ownership of the land under the creek.

Weddings, home and abroad

By Lois Martin

Two weddings in one week. More than even the most eager celebrants have a right to expect.

But more than that, there were two interesting contrasts in that grand tradition of marriage. Both couples used the time honored vows, were attended by family and friends and were sent off into the world together with volumes of best wishes.

But, my goodness, what contrasts there were in the trappings used to reach wedded bliss.

We attended the first nuptials in Maine. It was there July 25 that Tom and Candy became Mr. and Mrs. Perkins. Tommy's my nephew, a brother's son. For them Blue Hill residents turned out to gather at a country club reception.

PATCHES

Candy's a pretty young woman. She'd made her long, lovely gown. And in a separate thrust of creativity she made the magnificent wedding cake herself. It was one that awed a routine 9x12 sheet cake maker and clearly would have earned a respectful nod of a baker.

Audrey and Berwin Peaseley of Brooksville catered the event. And many hours were spent seeing old friends, family, celebrating amidst a glorious array of gifts from well wishers.

It was a most satisfying hometown occasion, a warm spot in the calendar. And if "Happy is the bride the sun shines on," holds true, Candy and Tommy are going to have a nice life together.

Then there was that glittering affair on the other side of the Atlantic...Prince Charles and Lady Diana, if not a fun couple, a fairy tale one.

Many of us were propped up in bed last Wednesday watching the spectacle at 5 a.m.

I don't cry at royal weddings. I wouldn't want to miss the grandeur through a veil of tears. So, like everyone else I just 'oohed' and 'ahhed.'

I don't believe Diana, the Princess of Wales, made her gown. That train would have been a devil on anyone's Singer. And to offer my position on the puff sleeves, I liked them, though a woman in Angelo's bakery later said Diana simply wasn't built to carry that breadth.

I particularly liked watching the Queen Mother. She peeked around the Prince's profile to watch the bride. Humanness looks good on those of royal birth. But I worried a bit about Queen Elizabeth herself.

Through some of the ceremony she looked as if she worried she'd made a poor choice in the caterer. It's probable wearing to be a Queen. If you've got things squared away at the castle, there are problems in some outlying district or province. If she doesn't start to tell herself, "100 years from now who'll know the difference," she's going to resemble those portraits of George Washington with the closed-mouth expressions.

Diana was either courageous or unrealistic in weeding the "obey" promise out of her vows. My husband said I promised to obey. I don't remember but it wouldn't have seemed like me to say that. Instead I'd have promised to "consider" all requests.

I didn't think the British couple exactly went out on a limb on the "richer or poorer" commitment. Theirs will be a life of unbridled luxury.

Still I bet they didn't get the beautiful Blue Hill pottery Candy and Tommy did. A friend took umbrage at America's gift of an $80,000 Steuben dish chosen by the Reagans. She said she never even got a pleasant note of good wishes when she was married, and she's a U.S. citizen who's paid enough tax money to have gone toward a little something for the china closet.

There were the usual debates following the royal pageant. Some said the New Zealand soprano's costume looked more clownlike than courtly. Others worried Nancy Reagan might bow or curtsy, implying the Queen's more important than anyone we have over here.

Neither one of those issues absorbs me. So far as I'm concerned someone good enough to sing at a royal wedding deserves to let her imagination soar when she's picking out her outfit. I certainly would. And I'd probably have bowed or curtsied a bit. Never hurts to pay homage to others. And there are plenty of people to whom I'll bow, take off my hat, applaud or curtsy who aren't even of royal blood. I fail to feel inferior in noting the strengths of others.

But anyway we did it last week, saw two nifty couples out of the dooryard with a "Just Married" sign on the rear window of the car, so to speak.

And I wish both the Perkins couple and the Prince/Princess of Wales duo a long and happy life. Beyond the scenic setting of Blue Hill Bay or Buckingham Palace, the newlyweds are simply men and women who are looking forward to the greatest 50th wedding anniversary party in 2031 that Blue Hill or London will ever have seen.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

Those who welcome a challenge don't have to climb the nearest mountain or jog five miles a day, we only need set foot in the nearest supermarket. Inflation finds many of us conniving over the meat counter, marching quickly past the bakery section, skipping the aisle that flaunts candy bars and tempting nibble and never, never shopping on an empty stomach. When even a rotten banana looks good enough to eat and the cashier produces a figure far surpassing your budget, keep in mind that there are many little ways of keeping food prices down. Harriet Martin suggests serving smaller portions of meat and more vegetables. Buy cheaper cuts and tenderize by braising or stewing. Watch for weekend specials and plan your meals around them, using fillers such as bread crumbs, wheat germ or oats to stretch ground meat. Serve more casseroles, stews, using leftovers in imaginative ways. Some lucky people may only have to go as far as their vegetable patch for her

GOLDEN GARDEN BAKE

1 small bunch [about 2 lbs.] broccoli, cooked, or 1 medium head [about 2 lbs.] cauliflower, cooked
1 can cheddar cheese soup
1/4 c. milk
Dash of nutmeg
2 T buttered bread crumbs
4 slices bacon, cooked and crumbled

In shallow baking dish (10x6x2") arrange vegetable. Blend soup, milk and nutmeg. Pour over vegetable. Top with crumbs. Bake at 350 degrees for 20 min., or until hot. Garnish with bacon. Makes 4 servings.

Violet Finzel says the best meat stretcher she knows of is turkey. You stuff and roast it for a meal, then slice leftover meat for sandwiches. Use small pieces for turkey a la king on toast. Use remainder, bones and all, for soup. By the time you reach the soup part of the turkey, you might want to celebrate with Virginia Warren's scrumptious

RHUBARB CUSTARD PIE

1 1/2 c. sugar
1/4 c. all-purpose flour
1/4 tsp. nutmeg
3 slightly beaten eggs
1 lb. rhubarb, cut in 1" slices [4 c.]
Pastry for 9" lattice-top pie
2 T butter or margarine

Combine sugar, flour and nutmeg. Beat into the eggs. Stir in rhubarb. Line 9" pie plate with pastry and fill. Dot with butter or margarine. Top with lattice crust. Bake in 400 degree oven for 50 to 60 min. Cool.

I'm sure that by now we all have ways of stretching the food dollars, but have you heard of these tips? Take bread out of the freezer by the slice...wrap bacon and breakfast sausage in small portions and thaw as they cook...buy large bags of frozen vegetables and remove only what you need for one meal...when baking cakes or quick breads, use muffin cups and wrap them separately for freezing...meat loaf can be prepared this way as well...when there are bargains on chickens or blade chuck roasts, prepare them according to any favorite recipe. Head for the ocean with fishing rod or clam fork, or take to the woods and pick berries for this, my favorite

BLUEBERRY SLUMP

1 qt. blueberries
1 c. brown sugar
1/4 tsp. salt
1 T vinegar

Bring these four ingredients to boil in large saucepan.

1 1/2 c. flour
1 T shortening
1/2 tsp. salt
3 tsp. baking powder

Combine these four ingredients and add 2/3 c. milk. Drop by teaspoonfuls onto blueberry mixture (like dumplings). Cover tightly until cooked. Serve warm with whip cream or ice cream.

Angler's corner

The blahs are here (say hello, blahs), which means most fishermen are catching nothing...or treading water, as they say down at the old dock side.

Most fishermen doesn't include the 10 per centers, however...those knowledgeable men and women who, because they know what they're doing, catch 90 per cent of whatever fish are biting.

And where are the 10 per centers now? A few are around the harbor islands off Hingham and Hull, chasing stripers at night on cut bait, the blues having taken their gluttonous appetites elsewhere for the time being. Others are off Third Cliff fishing live bait at night or very, very early in the morning. Still others are catching flounder in the North River on the incoming tide and moving up and down the river when they don't meet success.

Ten per centers always move because they know it is the fisherman who finds the fish, not your vice versa. The rich guys, and those who want to be rich, are out deep chasing giant bluefin tuna, or maybe swordfish.

...Then, there are daytrips...to the Race off Provincetown for blues and an occasional brave bass, or to Billingsgate Shoals or to the rips off Martha's Vineyard. Those who fish from the beach and are dissatisfied with the catch off Hull or Cohasset, should take themselves south as well...to the beaches of Nausset and Provincetown. Good surfmen always do well at P-Town...

The Gurnet will produce good rock cod, and a lot of pesky tautog which is supposed to be a Rhode Island fish but doesn't know any better.

...And the trout fishing? Lousy, try Wyoming or wait until fall when the water cools. Trout fishing is always best in the fall, especially since those stupid stocked fish of spring have wised up a little.

...Pickerel are available, though; look for them in the weed beds or hiding under lily pads. Sunfish are always available if you've nothing better to do.

...Largemouth bass fishing isn't too hot either, but should you wish to try, may we suggest suspending a shiner close to the surface and near weed beds. Make certain your bait is peppy.

...Statistically, fresh water fishing in Massachusetts is more popular than ever. License sales in 1980 were 50,000 higher than in 1979 and they are projected to increase again this year.

Also on the statistical front is this bit of news from the Shark Tagger Newsletter published by the National Marine Fisheries Service: one blue shark — the kind we often see around here in summer — travelled 3630 miles in nine months, while another went 3150 miles in 483 days. If you would like to receive a copy of the newsletter, write the Marine Fisheries Service, c/o: Northeast Fisheries Center, Narragansett, R.I. 02882.

Tips of the week: one, minnows are just as good for catching shy largemouth bass, and they're cheaper then shiners since you can net them yourself; two, those round bobbers don't always work in "busy" water or around "spooky" fish, and when they don't go for the long, thin bobbers instead. Less resistant.

Casino gambling

trippers are hardly the jet setters or high rollers who will stick around to explore a variety of leisure activities outside the casinos, providing more opportunities for local businessmen. As a result, the longed for 'ripple effect' is deflected by these tourists who spend all their time and money in the casinos. They gamble there, they eat there, they drink there, they shop there and they go no where else for entertainment. Local merchants don't make much money watching the tourists and their money ride by on buses. And how many people are willing to put up with all those buses anyway? Help the energy crisis, don't bring in casinos."

Fire Facts

Your community, according to state regulation, has laws governing fire safety features in restaurants, theatres and other public buildings. For example: doors must open outward, there must be more than one exit from each part of the building, corridors must be a certain minimum width, and interior finish materials must meet certain requirements in regard › flame-spread characteristics. These laws are enforced by the building department and the fire department inspectors. But, fire is always a possibility, it is important that you prepare yourself for a fire occurrance.

The following procedures and suggestions may assist you in the formulation of a mental evacuation plan.

1. In every building, look for at least two exits other than the elevators. (It is possible that some elevators can react to heat and bring occupants directly to the fire area.)

2. If you suspect that there is a fire, report it to the nearest employee or other responsible person so the fire department can be immediately notified and the occupants alerted.

3. When alerted to a fire emergency, leave quietly and orderly. Your composure sets an example for others.

4. Do not try to fight the fire yourself.

5. Once out of the building, immediately use the nearest fire alarm box or outside telephone to notify the fire department from outside the building.

The day of the tire — or tiring isn't it?

By Patricia Desmond

One day Gosh and Wren set off with Beloved and their precious Aunt Gem in the 10-year-old car Beloved used whenever it wasn't raining.

The car, being delicate and imported, disliked wet or chilly weather. It would buck, moan and faint away in the rain. Consequently Beloved learned not to try the car's patience.

Anyway the sun was bright and the gas gauge was working and registering plenty.

The fivesome, Gosh, Wren, Beloved, Aunt Gem and the car, whose name cannot be printed, headed off for Morgan Airport. Time had come to a close on Aunt Gem's vacation and she was returning to the hinterlands.

Super Mom was off somewhere cleaning and Mit was napping peacefully. July was on a special overnight excursion to her best friend's house.

The car purred and sputtered rhythmically all the way along the super highway.

Aunt Gem told the boys they could visit her in the hinterlands whenever they wanted.

"You and Super Mom should come sometime too," Aunt Gem said. "Do you think you could come in October and the boys at Christmas. July could come in February," Aunt Gem was a wise and wonderful woman who knew about the joys of being alive. One of the joys she knew about was the joy of moderation.

"Don't you think you'd be seeing us too often?" Beloved asked, a twinkle in his lovely brown eyes.

"You're still teasing. Just like you did when we were kids," Aunt Gem smiled back. "You know what I mean. I like all of you. But when you're all together, it's hard to hear a thought bouncing off a cymbal."

"You could hear it if it bounced on my cymbals," Wren said with five-year-old honesty.

"She means we're noisy," Gosh interpreted with obvious irritation. He was embarrassed at his younger brother's lack of savoir faire, although he couldn't spell it.

The plane left on schedule despite the human chain on the runway, some people said were the former air traffic controllers. The planes were leaving exactly on schedule because they replaced the striking control tower workers with experienced mothers. Not enough can be said for the qualities of motherhood.

Beloved, Gosh and Wren waved through the safety plate windows at the roaring plane. Two out of three realized Aunt Gem couldn't see them, but somehow it felt better to wave at the sleek moving craft that was moving Aunt Gem out of their lives, back into her own world.

The delicate car moved into third gear, leaving Morgan Airport and heading for this very town by the mighty sea.

Beloved sang "Two Thousand Bottles of Beer on the Wall." Gosh counted black limosines. Wren blinked his eyes with steady determination. Sleep would not easily overtake that child.

All at once the right front tire said, "Plop," bringing the car to a lopsided halt.

Beloved whispered to it, begging it to move on, if only just abit, just enough to move off the super highway, maybe even to the next service station.

The car crunched along slowly, trying as best it could, very keenly aware the children were tucked inside.

And then it stopped. It hadn't made it to a service station. But at least it was off super highway. Beloved had the boys move to the side of the road and prepared to change the tire.

"Aren't you too old to do that?" Gosh asked with the innocence of any pre-adolescent.

"No, now stand out of the way and don't talk to me," Beloved replied in sugar tones.

"Why don't we just take a bus home," Wren offered, not realizing the words for Gosh were not for him alone.

"The buses don't go far enough," Beloved said.

"Well a taxi then," Wren tried.

"I only have $3," Beloved explained. "We could get about a block and a half closer to home."

"Well why don't we call Super Mom," Gosh said.

"Changing a tire isn't so difficult," Beloved snapped.

Inside the trunk of the car was a tire just as old as Gosh. It was the original factory-made spare and it looked like something that should be hung on the top of a junk hill.

"Maybe we will call Super Mom," Beloved said.

There was a phone booth across the street, except the vandals had beaten them there. The receiver was missing.

Inside the booth, someone had written the car's name.

Beloved decided to try a double edged strategy. He took the boys and the scarcely inflated tire and walked on in a direction he guessed would lead to A) another phone booth or B) a tire repair specialty store.

Starting out Beloved rolled the tire and the boys walked on the inside of the sidewalk in the hot summer sun.

"I want to try pushing the tire, please, Dad," said the young boy who hadn't cleaned the dishes out of his bedroom since sometime in June.

"No let me do it, " said the boy who thought brushing his teeth was menial labor.

They took turns, Beloved, Gosh and Wren, rolling about a mile through the edge of the city, past one burnt out phone booth after another. Past one boarded up service station after another.

Finally in a dimly lit drug store they found a phone that rang all the way from them to Super Mom, who said of course she would come rescue the tire rolling heroes.

There are times, she thought, driving toward their soot-filled destination when Gosh and Wren are so brilliantly heroic that even a Super Mother's pride is justified.

At those times those two young super children bear little resemblance to the messy room dwellers who ordinarily rumple around inside Gosh and Wren's clothes.

Cohasset Auto Body scores well

Cohasset Auto Body, a team in the Woman's Slo Pitch League in Braintree, has taken over first place, beating Roadhouse of Marshfield 7-6 last week.

Cohasset Auto Body, with a 13-2 record, can clinch first place with a victory Wednesday night. Playoffs begin next week.

Some of the team players are from Cohasset and Marshfield. They include Maureen Gavaghan, Marguerite and Debbie Webber and Sue Hale all of Marshfield, Donna Herbert of Cohasset and Cathy Colman and Julie Moore, former Cohasset residents.

The team traveled to Falmouth last weekend to play in the Audrey Moore Tournament featuring teams from Connecticut, Maryland and New York.

The team lost to Barnstable 10-1 and Yarmouth, 5-1 despite an excellent offensive and defensive effort by Gavaghan.

The third basemen hit a homerun, was intentionally walked three times and made several outstanding stops.

This is the team's third appearance at the tournament.

Cable TV

Board Chairman Henry Ainslie said it would be unlikely the selectmen would decide to take the work upon themselves.

Bruce Edmonds, a resident, asked why Pratt was urging the town to get involved in cable without the costs being known.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said Pratt had attended a meeting in Hingham as the board's representative and was not representing a particular company. He explained the town would not pay the cost of cable television.

In fact cable television pays a fee to both town and state government wherever it is licensed.

Ainslie asked why the town would want cable.

Scott Obreza, chairman of the Hanover cable study committee, explained that Starcase, the pay movie channel, costs $18.95 a month and it is only one channel.

"For the same amount of money with cable you could get Home Box Office, another movie channel, plus another series of channels, cable news is on 24 hours and sports cable, a cultural cable.

"For the same amount you could get 35 or 40 channels."

Pratt said the most important part of cable is the opportunity for local channels.

Ainslie made it clear that Pratt will be going to the Hanover meeting to gather information, not to commit the town to a course of action.

Greek Taverna

The Greek Orthodox Church is planning another Taverna for Saturday, August 15, and Sunday, August 16.

Selectmen granted a liquor license for those two days for sale of wine and beer. The hours are 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Saturday and 1 to 7 p.m. on Sunday.

Money raised from the Greek Taverna goes toward the mortgage on the former Pope Memorial Church.

Parking problems along Jerusalem Road during the two-day festival are being worked on by church members. Car pooling is one solution proposed.

Landscape course

The South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, is enrolling now for a one-week landscape painting course, given by Margaret Dillon. The course runs Aug. 10-14, from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Fees are $30 for members, and $35 for non-members.

Beginning, intermediate and advanced work will be done outdoors in the Cohasset-Hull area. Critiques will be given.

The opening of the show will take place on Monday, Aug. 3 following the performance of a "Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum." During the intermission, the opening will be announced and the audience will be invited to view the show and meet the artists and the actors.

The exhibiting South Shore Art Center Gallery Artists are Margaret Dillon, Louise Kalish, Liz Wyman, Roz Farbush, Claffe Williams Cleda Marie Simmons, Ruth Bragg, Berj Kaliay, Brooks Kelly, Amy Wharf, Irena Roman, Virginia Avery, John Goldie, Constance Flavell Pratt, Syria and Michael McNabb.

For further information, please call the Center at 383-9548.

Creative art

Louise Kalish, art teacher, lecturer and gallery tours group leader as well as creative artist, will teach Creative Drawing and Painting, starting Aug. 4, Tuesday and Thursday mornings, from 10-12:30 at the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset.

This course will emphasize design, composition and color theory with experiments in abstract styles and techniques in a variety of media, with individual instruction being given.

Drawing and painting will be featured the first four classes and the last two classes will consist of a Two-Session Monoprint Workshop, Aug. 18 and 20.

This special workshop is suited to advanced or professional artists who want to learn a new technique and explore the excitement of direct printing.

Kalish, who studied at Mass. College of Art, Brandeis and the Musuem of Fine Arts, has had numerous one-woman shows including those at Simmons College, Gallery 7, Danbury, Conn., and the City Hall Concourse Gallery in Boston.

She has also participated in many group shows. Her paintings are in the collections of the First National Bank of Boston and the Maritime Academy, Buzzards Bay.

Dance course

Claire Gay in Berman will direct the Center School of Dance at the Community Center of Cohasset this fall in a program which will offer several exciting new classes.

A professional dancer, Mrs. Berman received her BA degree in dance from Adelphi University and an MA degree in dance education from Teacher's College, Columbia University. She has performed with the Pearl Lang Dance Company, the Alwin Nikolais Dance Company, the Gloria Contreras Dance Company and has danced major roles in touring companies of "My Fair Lady" and "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum."

School bus stops unknown Officials study safety factors

By Susan Ovans

It's not likely that the school department will make known the new bus routes and stops for the new school year before the last week in August.

School Superintendent Eugene Crowell at a school committee meeting last week told the board that the routes and stops have been established in draft form but that the administration will seek input from the various school board members ("individually or in pairs") and Chief John DeBassio of the police department "for help in safety areas" before making the routes known.

Although school committee member Martha Gjesteby suggested that the administration hold an open forum on the matter before making any final decisions, Crowell rejected the idea.

Board member Diana Kornet said that consultation of the board is an administrative courtesy and assured concerned parents at the meeting that they "will be delighted with what the school administration has come up with." Kornet said that the routes were basically unchanged although they have fewer bus stops.

Crowell said that the department will keep stops off Jerusalem Road and Forest Street. He explained that school officials are riding the routes and making adjustments to them; also, aides will be riding the buses on the first week of school since, for the first time, primary and intermediate students will ride together.

School Committee Chairwoman Irene Brown said that the new routes will cause no disruption to younger students, and that parents who had requested an open meeting were "making a mountain out of a molehill."

The school system recently bought two used buses

Feola turns in his gun & searches for employment

Randy Feola, son of the former chief, is looking for work.

His lawyer says he expects to find something in construction.

The former patrolman headed off proceedings last week aimed at disciplinary action by sending Atty. John Ridge to the selectmen with his letter of resignation.

Still the selectmen heard the report of Police Chief John DeBassio that he believed the 37-year-old Feola was intoxicated when he saw him in a cell in the Quincy police station late last month. Feola never denied the charge made against him that he discharged a gun within 500 feet of a dwelling.

When the case went to court Friday Feola admitted sufficient facts for a guilty finding — which is not an admission of guilt. He was found guilty by Judge James McDaniel who ordered him placed on six months probation. There were additional stipulations that Feola would turn in his gun permit and see a court psychiatrist.

Feola's side of the story is that he only shot the gun to attract help as five men came after him outside the Beachcomber, a bar along Wollaston Beach.

The following letters were released by the selectmen's office after the public hearing last Wednesday:

August 4, 1981

Henry W. Ainslie, Jr., Chairman
Town of Cohasset Selectmen

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Over the last four years, I have found it increasingly difficult emotionally and with added pressures to deal with responsibilities effectively as a Police Officer in the Town of Cohasset

During this period I was basically assigned to the 4 P.M. to midnight shift; I alternated between subordinate and superior in the presence and absence of a shift commander. On many occasions, I found this frequent transition difficult to make. Since the last promotional exams (which took place about five years ago) in which I passed the exam and did quite well, I have received extensive publicity and a lot of accusations because of a magazine publication and I feel as though I have been in a state of limbo since this took place. The pressures of alternating responsibilities and the uncertainty on my future advancement have, for the last few years weighed very heavily upon me. Although under emotional strain and anxiety, I have always made a special effort not to allow how I felt with my feelings to affect or influence the manner in which I performed my duties as a Police Officer.

During the past year, working under the weight of an undated letter of resignation, being constantly on guard and under scrutiny, helped contribute to my stress and fears upon my job. These fears and pressures have gradually taken their toll on me. Although being able to control these pressures while on the job, I have found it increasingly difficult to deal with these stresses in my personal life during my off duty hours.

My increasing difficulty in handling and dealing with the pressures and feelings of the past few years has finally made it evident to me that it would best serve me and the Town of Cohasset if I pursued a livelihood in the private work force. I therefore, am taking this opportunity to submit this letter of

Regionalized cable T.V. priced

By Mike Berger

Will regionalization keep the price of cable television down for subscribers? The chairman of the Hanover Cable Study Committee and two representatives of cable companies think so.

Scott Obreza, Hanover cable study committee chairman, told representatives of 10 communities and about 70 others at Hanover Town Hall Monday to relay the benefits of South Shore cable television to their selectmen.

Obreza, who organized the meeting, said, "I can't guarantee that money will be saved by going regionalization. But it seems to me to make sense."

He said if one cable company serves several towns, the company's cost for equipment would be less and more services would be available to the town.

"One big facility makes more sense than four small ones," he said.

Atty. Daniel Blake, representing Southern Mass. Cable System, said a regional system would attract more cable companies because it would serve a greater number of subscribers. The more subscribers, he said, would reflect in less inflation pressure.

Victor Colantonio of Bay Shore Cable TV said regionalization will keep prices lower for the Students test scores high

The SRA or Science Research Associates testing for the school system shows strong improvements and high results everywhere but in first grade.

The board heard a report last Tuesday from Stephen E. Hart, Assistant to the Superintendent for state, federal and special programs concerning the results of recent SRA and basic skills testing. SRA tests are administered to grades 1-11. The state-mandated basic skills testing was given to the second, fifth and eighth grades.

Hart said that he was "very impressed" with the results of the SRA testing. In SRA scoring, percentiles are used to portray where a class stands in relation to the norm group of more than 816 classes tested nationwide this year. Thus, if a class scored at the 80th percentile, it means that the average student scored better than 80% of the 156,000 children tested nation-wide.

Hart reported on 147 separate scores for the 11 grades tested. Seven of the eleven grades scored between the 78th to 89th percentiles, with four grades in the 61st to 77th percentiles. Hart said the results were especially gratifying in light of the fact that grades 9-11 had been renormed this year, that is, adjustments were made in the scoring. He said that generally renorming will be reflected in slightly lower scores, although this did not happen in Cohasset, where the score levels either remained the same or improved significantly.

Overall, the SRA scores show a continued improvement at all levels except for first graders. Hart attributed the continued improvement to special emphasis on spelling throughout the system and on social studies and science in the intermediate grades.

Cohasset's week

Irate ticket winners

A Cohasset patrolman gave out a ticket that left two Cohasset women furious Sunday night.

Police officials say it's hardly the first time townspeople have been enraged by the new tougher ticketing policy of the police department.

The one Sunday night was issued on Sohier Street by the Music Circus in a no parking zone. The women say it wasn't fair because they weren't really parking. They were sitting in the car, waiting for the daughter of one of the women. That daughter is an usher at the Music Circus.

"Why didn't he just tell me to move?" the irate woman asked the desk officer afterwards.

She was told she would have to talk with Police Chief John DeBassio, who has been talking to quite a few irate ticket winners this summer.

School registration

The Cohasset public schools will hold registration for all new students entering the system from 9 a.m. to 12 noon daily Wednesday, Aug. 19 through Wednesday, Sept. 2.

You are urged to phone for an appointment to assist the school department in making the registration as smooth as possible.

Call the Joseph Osgood School at 383-6117 for Grades K-3; the Deer Hill School at 383-6115 for Grades 4-6; and the high school guidance office at 383-6102 for Grades 7-12.

Westcorner Invitational

What occasion would bring Town Accountant William Signorelli, Fire Chief Charles Piepenbrink, Advisory Board Vice Chairman James Lagrotteria, and nearly 60 other men together for a round of golf?

The tenth annual Westcorner Invitational Golf Tournament played recently at the Cohasset Golf Club.

Tournament players gather once a year for the traditional morning game because they have something very special in common. Each knew and loved the late Rocco Froio.

James Lagrotteria, organizer of the event, explained Froio spent much of his time helping the kids who grew up on Hull Street.

"He took me to my first baseball game," Lagrotteria remembered.

In later years these same kids, who all have either Italian parents or grandparents (the handful of exceptions are made honorary Italians for the day), in turn honored Froio by organizing a special day around a game he loved: golf.

The winner each year receives the Rocco Froio Memorial Trophy. Dominic "Mike" Emmanuello won the tournament this year. Ted Galo had the low gross score for the day. Susan Cay was unanimously named most aggravating caddy — her presence kept distracting the players.

Law books supplied

Atty. John Ridge has supplied the police station with a set of law books, all the better to cite violations of law.

Atty. Ridge, who both lives and practices law in town, gave the books with the stipulation they remain in the police station and that he be allowed to use them from time to time.

School workers appointed

The following school workers were appointed last week:

Mrs. Irene M. Volpe, Special Education Teacher, Joseph Osgood, $17,340; Jon Anderson, Mathematics Teacher, High School, $14,491; F. Joseph Neundorf, Chemistry Teacher, High School, $19,074; Mrs. Ann Porter, Guidance Counselor, High School, $16,473 plus differential 1.08 equals $17,790.84; Mrs. Sheila Travers, Secretary, Special Services, $201 per week; Mrs. Marjorie Murphy, Library Aide, Deer Hill School, $6,514; and Jon Anderson, Coach, Head Soccer, $1,605.

Boat excise taxes

Officials of Cohasset and Scituate think they may be near agreement on the disputed boat excise taxes for crafts on the Scituate side of Cohasset Harbor.

The amount sought by Cohasset from the taxes collected by Scituate is roughly $1,000. Scituate town meeting passed over the article authorizing the payment after Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray filed a bill to change the Scituate boundary line and give the harbor totally to Cohasset.

Cohasset officials have decided to drop the quest for the land. Indeed selectmen say they never really supported it.

Think school

School starts Tuesday, Sept. 8.

Sessions begin at 8:30 a.m. at Deer Hill School and at 8:40 a.m. at Osgood School.

The junior/senior high school begins at 7:54 a.m.

Solar panels approved

The historic district commission decided to let Jeffrey and Elizabeth Bates install solar panels on the roof of their Highland Avenue home.

The approval was required since the panels will be visible from Cohasset Common, a historic district zone.

New police logging

The police department has gone to a new system of logging its work.

A universal code is now in effect for incidents.

The log still includes some description of what's happening in town.

longest period of time. "If prices are going to go up, regionalization will keep it at a smaller increment."

Representatives of Hingham, Cohasset, Norwell, Hanson, Pembroke, Abington, Whitman, Duxbury and Hull attended the meeting. A majority of the representatives told Obreza they were asked by the town's selectmen to attend the meeting to learn about cable television and not to commit the town to any action.

Those towns not sending representatives included Scituate, Rockland, Weymouth and Marshfield. In the South Shore area, Weymouth, Marshfield and Kingston have licensed a cable franchise. The Marshfield license is under appeal.

Obreza said if Norwell, Hanover, Rockland, Hanson, Pembroke, Abington, and Whitman were regionalized, cable television could reach 26,721 homes at a density of 67 homes per mile.

He told the audience towns should not proceed independently because it would lead to "haphazard" licensing and giving one company an advantage in another town.

"One award gives a company an advantage in a neighboring town," said Obreza.

Obreza told of an example where one cable company received a license in one town and applied in another. Two other applicants withdrew when the company received the license in the other community.

A better alternative, but not the best, according to Obreza, is if a group of towns agree to award one license. Obreza called that measure, "difficult to implement."

The best alternative as outlined by the Hanover chairman, who works as a video tape specialist for Channel 5, is for:

— All towns to initiate the process.
— Each town advertises for applications.
— Towns work together, review applications and write each town's request for proposal.
— Selectmen approve a proposal.
— Cable companies submit amended applications.
— Towns get together to review amended applications.
— Each town holds public hearings with each company.
— CATV Commissions of each town recommend one company to selectmen.
— Selectmen award license.

TOWN BENEFITS

These are the public access benefits listed by Obreza if communities approve a cable license: Schools would be provided with television equipment and classrooms could be linked together; school programs could be televised as well as school sports; Police and firemen could be trained in-house; Town meetings could be televised; residents could be alerted in an emergency, and police could install microphones in the schools which would signal a break or vandalism.

SOME QUESTIONS

Although Obreza spoke highly of the benefits of cable television for the towns and subscribers, some representatives and audience members had some doubts.

Some representatives said they would need better proof and financial data that rates for subscribers would be less if communities regionalized.

Don Willy of Hingham asked what if a community wants to withdraw after 15 years. "What if the service is terrible and the town wants to pull out?"

Peter Pratt of Cohasset, who supports regionalization, warned of one pitfall.

"Why should citizens of Hull subsidize citizens of Hingham unless the returns or services come back to Hull? Selectmen will be out to look after their own citizens and to make sure the best services come to their town," he said.

Pratt supports regionalization based on geography and economic proximity. For example, a region of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Scituate would be better than a regionalization of 15 South Shore communities.

HANOVER'S INTEREST

Hanover is in the middle step of a two-year program which could lead to selectmen awarding a license in March. However, that process could stall if communities decide to regionalize.

Five companies have applied for the Hanover license and have each expressed interest in regionalization. They include Scripps-Howard Cable Company of Wellesley, Bay Cable Television Association of Middleboro, Southern Mass. Cablevision of Quincy, Time-Mirror Cable Television of Boston and Wometco Cable Television of Boston.

Cable costs submitted by the companies are $950,000 by Scripps-Howard, $825,200 by County Cable, $1,081,000 by Southern Mass., $822,000 by Time-Mirror and $1,153,900 by Wometco.

Scripps-Howard and Wometco will lay the cable only if there is a minimum density of 45 and 20 homes per mile respectively.

Willy asked the difference between a commercial and a municipally or town-owned cable company. Willy, one of 13 applicants to the proposed Hingham advisory committee, wanted to know if it would be feasible for the Hingham Electric Light Plant to run the cable company.

Blake said, "There would be advantages but the question is: Can the town spend the money under Proposition 2½? Does the town have the expertise?"

A farewell to Abbie

By Erin O'Brien and Brenda Birmann

Cohasset has a great many physical qualities, such as a beautiful harbor, beaches, tennis clubs, and other similar attractions, which make the town a fun place for a child or an adult to spend a summer. Yet, there are few people today who would spend summer after summer helping out the kids of this town.

We would like to take this time to recognize one exceptional person — Miss Abigail White (better known as "Abbie") — who has devoted an incredible amount of herself to the happiness of Cohasset children.

Abbie has spent her last three summers coaching the Cohasset Swim Team, this summer's team being the largest ever with 180 swimmers. During these three summers, we have seen an amazing amount of growth and improvement from the team in several areas. Not only have the swimmers' times improved one hundred percent, but also their swimming strokes have become more often "legal" (performed properly according to specific rules) for competition.

Besides putting a great effort into the improvement of her swimmers' strokes, starts, and turns, Abbie has also worked hard promoting a positive attitude of good sportsmanship, strong team spirit, and the desire for self-improvement in the minds of the team members.

Evidence of her success in this area can be seen in the number of swimmers who attend extra or more difficult practices or who satisfy themselves with seeing their own times improve and cheering while their more experienced teammates win the ribbons.

However, Abbie's role as swimteam coach involves much more than simply running practices and swim meets. For the past two summers she has also directed a swim team play. Last year she successfuly wrote, choreographed, and directed the well-known show "Mary Poppins," the funds from which payed for the new lane markers purchased by the team last summer. This year, she is again choreographing and directing a play, this time "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory," which will be performed by the swim team on August 18 and 19 to raise money for a much-needed new diving board. The scenery, dances, and staging of these shows illustrate only a small portion of Abbie's creative imagination and widespread talent.

Between the daily swim team practices, numerous meets, and her work as part-time lifeguard at the town pool, Abbie manages to teach private swimming lessons, driving as far as Marshfield (in her well-known light blue VW bug) for one of them. These lessons have highlighted the summers of many of her students. In fact, several of the swim team's top swimmers first had lessons from Abbie. Moreover, in spite of all her rushing about from one lesson to the next, or from lessons to play practices, she still finds time to play soccer two nights a week and to play "Mom" to two 12-year-old summer visitors.

It is a wonder how she can fit so many extra projects into her schedule of coaching and lifeguarding; needless to say, she sacrifices many of her days off to teaching additional swimming lessons or to holding play practices and scenery workshops. We will never to able to figure out where she gets her energy and talent to do so much so well.

Reasonable fees

The harbor study committee let go of its plan to establish fees for boaters.

For the time, at least.

It seems easy to understand that it's too late for this year. But now's the time to design a plan for 1982. There's quite a bit of work needed to back up the actual fees.

The way to begin, as Selectmen Mary Jane McArthur said not too long ago, is to compile a list of the costs of running the harbor.

There are far more costs in maintaining the harbor than the harbormaster's budget. There are costs for police and fire protection. New floats. Dredging. No parking signs. Some litigation now and then. Lighting. Etc.

The harbor fees should at least approximate the costs. But the only way to judge the success of that approximation is to start with the expenses.

From there it's up to the harbor study committee and other town officials to develop a system that's fair to the harbor's users, commercial fishermen and recreational boaters alike.

The system that was under discussion, until being officially tabled last week, would have charged a $50 fee for the use of lobster cars, a device used to store lobsters, $25 for use of floats and a per foot fee for floats.

The idea of the fees sounds reasonable.

The judgment call should come on the amounts, once the facts are available.

Buy Cohasset sports

Buy your tickets for the Sammy Davis Jr. show through the Cohasset all-school sports fund-raiser and keep athletics well funded.

Eugene Crowell, school superintendent, says there are still about 200 tickets available for the 8 p.m. show Tuesday, August 25, at the South Shore Music Circus.

They sell at $20, $25 and $30 a piece, which includes a donation for the sports program. The show has been sold out at the music circus box office for several weeks.

With a successful fund-raising program school officials expect all sports programs run in the past will be continued. Funds for some programs, especially at the junior high school level, were deleted in the budget process due to the limitations of Proposition 2½.

For tickets call the superintendent's office at 383-6111, Clark Chatterton, athletic director, at 383-6103, the high school principal's office at 383-6100 or Rosee Duffy at 383-0292.

High cost of cheap buses

Letters

To the Editor

I would ask the three members of the Cohasset School Committee, Mrs. Brown, Mr. Conley, and Mrs. Kornet, (since Mrs. Gjesteby opposed, and Mrs. Langmaid was absent) who voted in favor of purchasing the 1968 GMC bus and the 1970 GMC bus at $1,000 each at the last Cohasset School Committee meeting for the purpose of transporting Cohasset school children to reconsider your vote.

1. I am concerned with the safety of the buses used to transport Cohasset youngsters. While it is true that school buses have to pass mandated vehicle inspections, and it is possible that you may have no repair bills at all in the next year, it is, however, more probable that you will have additional repair expenses during the next year, since the probability of metal fatigue and wear and tear increase with the age of all mechanical vehicles. Inquire as to the number of school bus brake failures last year! As examples of the high cost of bus repair you recently paid bills well in excess of $2,000 for an engine for Bus #11 which is approximately four years old, as well as over $200 for a clutch job on Bus #1.

2. Newer buses have more safety and comfort specifications — e.g. soft seats.

3. Consider storage costs. The contractor from whom you leased part of your fleet complained that he was put in a bad bind by the vastly increased cost of gasoline and oil (school buses only get approximately 5 mpg). Cohasset Town Counsel ruled that his contract with the Cohasset schools was valid, however, and should not be roken due to increased gasoline costs. At about the same time town-owned school buses parked at the high school had 13 tires slashed (approximate damage $1,300), and two bus windows had previously been broken. A storage contract was entered into with the bus contractor for approximately$30-$40/mo. per vehicle to store town-owned buses on his land. It was hoped to give the contractor monetary relief, as well as insure the safety of the buses. However, when I voted as a school committee member for the storage arrangement, I assumed it would be for a short term. Won't you have to pay additional storage on these newly purchased buses? Would it not be better to bring the

Riding the P&B

By Tanna Kasperowicz
[A New Commuter]

I don't have any horror stories yet. One night my window wouldn't close, so I sat with the rain beating on me. But it was a warm, summer rain.

Over the past three weeks I have found the P & B Bus to be pretty reliable. The P & B's "Silver Fox" hits Cohasset Common at 7:35 on the dot. He is so reliably on-target that some commuters have to run to make the bus and sometimes find themselves missing it. To some extent we Bus People depend on the P & B to be at least a little late.

We Bus People may look like carboard people from the street but we must conserve our energies for our jobs. Consequently, only occasionally do you hear any chattering on the bus. Except on the Silver Fox's run. And it's usually the Silver Fox who is chattering. He seems to get upset when we snooze. But there is no way to stop us. We're reading, writing some notes or whatever when suddenly our eyes just close.

There are unwritten rules about riding the bus. There is no sign at South Station which tells you which bus is really going to Cohasset. It's something you have to learn. It took me a week to learn that the Cohasset/Scituate/Hingham bus leaves from the stand marked 10 in the middle aisle. I learned this by asking a young woman.

"When I first started riding the bus I didn't know how to tear my ticket off or where to wait or anything...I was so stupid," the young woman said.

This is what I have learned about buying tickets.

You buy a book of commuter tickets.

On the way in you leave your ticket attached to the whole thing...unfolding only the first section for the driver to punch. Once it's perforated, and you're on the bus, you tear it off and put it in your pocket.

It's important that you put it in a pocket. If you fall asleep with your ticket in your hand your hand will relax and you will surely lose your ticket. People lose their perforated tickets all of the time. This makes bus drivers angry. However, they will grudgingly let you off the bus.

At the end of the ride you simply hand the perforated stub to the driver. You repeat this process on the trip home. OUTBOUND: LEAVE THE SECOND PORTION OF THE TICKET ATTACHED TO THE TICKET BOOK, have the driver punch it, then tear it off and PUT IT IN YOUR POCKET or in your wallet.

Unfortunately, some drivers prefer that you tear the second stub of the round-trip ticket off before they perforate it. It's a shorter ticket and harder to perforate when you're holding it. Also, I suspect they don't like to risk touching us.

After I thought I had gotten all the rules straightened out a week ago one bus driver asked me why I hadn't torn off my second stub to prepare it for perforation.

I said: "It says if it's torn off it will be void!"

"Do you believe everything you read?" he sneered.

The very next time he drove I tore off the first stub of my round-trip ticket for perforation and he sneered again. Which just goes to show it is impossible to please some bus drivers.

(ED.'S note; Tanna Kasperowicz is Public Relations & Promotions Manager for Office Specialists of Boston.)

buses back to the high school yard, especially if one of the accesses is blocked to vehicles as per vote of town meeting? Is approximately $1,400 damages over several years offset by the long term costs of storage — billed last month at $320? Could not these heavy storage costs of well over $3,000/year go toward renting or buying a new bus?

4. Consider bus leasing. The owner assumes the bus repair costs.

5. Attention should be paid to the fact that you are downgrading the town-owned fleet through this purchase by greatly increasing the average age of the buses. If the town-owned 1972 Buses #1 and #5 have already been described in "four letter words" by drivers to me, why should you buy even older buses?

6. A school committee should not be a rubber stamp. You should investigate and carefully consider, even if two of you who voted for this live within 1/4 mile of the high school grounds, whether the recommendations of your bus coordinator are wise. Why should Cohasset buy second or third hand buses, when, as two police safety officers have volunteered to me, "The Town of Hull has a policy of selling their school buses when they reach five or six years of age."

7. You may argue that Cohasset is small — only 10 square miles. But you cannot insure that old buses will not be used to transport children to other towns for athletics, musicals, field trips, etc.

8. A 1968 bus used in the 1981-82 school year is approximately 14 years old. How many Cohasset parents would buy their 16-year-old children 14-year-old cars to drive in?

9. The bus route starting the front door of my house via King St., Route 3A, and Pond Street to the front door of the high school is exactly 2.0 miles on my speedometer. Therefore when you transport my three children to the Junior/Senior High School next year you may be entitled to state reimbursement. As a parent I am concerned, and opposed to the Cohasset School Committee spending both my state taxes and town tax monies to purchase 1968 and 1970 buses to transport my three children or any Cohasset child to school.

Not only is Abbie terrific with kids, but also with her fellow coaches, lifeguards, co-teachers, and other friends. Her popularity stems from her ability to keep smiling in spite of her exhausting schedule. Somehow she has a way of making people happy, of brightening up an otherwise dull day just by being herself. For several years now, Abbie has brightened the lives of many people in Cohasset in this way.

Unfortunately, though, this will be the last year for a while, for our favorite kid lover, coach, swimming teacher, lifeguard, play director, and friend may not be back next summer. As a student at Boston College, Abbie plans to go to Australia this fall for approximately five months of student teaching, after which she hopes to teach out west for a few years. In any case, she will most likely not return to coach next summer, and it will be very sad to see her go.

While Abbie is gone, Cohasset summers will seem very, very different — she has done so much for so many people here in Cohasset, and she has become an invaluable friend to those of us who have been lucky enough to work with her. We know that when she leaves, a part of us will be leaving with her. Of course, there are the special memories for us to keep, but in spite of this Abbie White will be sadly missed.

As Abbie travels, we send our best wishes with her. For now, however, we would like to take the time to thank her — if it is possible to do so — for bringing so much happiness to our lives (and we know we are not alone in saying this). We cannot think of one other person who has done so much for the kids in this town! We love and will miss you, Abbie! Thanks for being you.....

Chapman, Young, Davenport place

Cohasset Flying Scot skippers, Peter Chapman, Terry Young and Bob Davenport placed in the Northeast District Championship held last weekend off Buzzards Bay.

Thirty-one boats competed in the three-day race which was part of the Buzzards Bay Regatta week. Boats from all over New England, excluding Connecticut, raced.

Peter Chapman's boat placed seventh, Terry Young, 10th and Bob Davenport, 18th in a series of five races held Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The races ranged between five and seven miles and followed a triangular Olympic-style course.

Young and his crew of Mike Birmann and Christine Barrett showed the most improvement of the Cohasset fleet. Young's boat started poorly on Friday, finishing in the bottom third of the fleet. By Sunday's final race, Young's boat finished fifth and 10th overall.

Crewmates for Chapman were Perry Harris and Steve D'Onofrio and Joe D'Onofrio for Davenport's boat.

The Cohasset Flying Scot Fleet Summer Series, race 12 of the 15-race series, will resume this weekend. Special trophies will be given to the winners.

Cohasset Auto Body 1st in league

A forfeiture by the Flower Mill team last enabled Cohasset Auto Body, a team in the Women's Slo Pitch League in Braintree, to capture first place in the regular season standings.

As a result, Cohasset will play the fourth place team, O'Rourke, in a semi-finals playoff this week.

Games were scheduled for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights at 6 p.m., at Tenniman Field in Braintree. The field is located off Rte. 3, near Valle's Restaurant.

Cohasset, with an overall record of 14-2, will face O'Rourke, 11-5. The winner will enter finals action Monday.

Some of the team players are from Cohasset and Marshfield. They include Maureen Gavaghan, Marguerite and Debbie Webber and Sue Hale, all of Marshfield, Donna Herbert of Cohasset and Cathy Coleman and Julie Moore, former Cohasset residents.

Cohasset will be hurt by the loss of Gavaghan who will not play this week because of a sprained ankle. She is an excellent third baseman and the team's "homerun hitter."

Gavaghan should be ready for action next week if Cohasset makes the finals.

Balancing ...

Jim Burke (center) seems to be getting the best of the floating tube. His two friends, Doug Bennett (left), 11, and Greg Burns, 15, fight to keep their balance. The three boys were enjoying a summer's day, near Kimball's, in Cohasset Harbor.

Cohasset casino

By Beth Harling

"Watch the casino, see how it grows," is the latest warning from Carol Oteri, president of Citizens Against Casino Gambling, Inc.

She said, "Casino proponents may only be admitting to plans for one casino in Hull, but they keep increasing its size to the point where it is equivalent to two casinos.

"What began as a 250 'Modified casino' project proposed by Greylock Associates in May 1977 grew to the 400 room complex described by MGM Grand/Greylock last March. MGM's latest quotes inflate the hotel to a possible 800 rooms with expanded casino. Residents with good memories are not going to be fooled by promises of 'minimal impact' on our region."

As an example of promises that were impossible to keep, the Hull resident quoted an article from Variety (April 27, 1977). "Following the legalization of casino gambling in Atlantic City casino backers described New Jersey's legislation as the 'finest casino control bill — one which would keep the underworld out of Atlantic City casinos'," she began.

"It has, in fact, failed to prevent the bloody warfare over control of casino connected unions described in living color in a recent issue of Life magazine.

"Life's assessment of the current situation is, 'As far as the Mob is concerned, Atlantic City is a banquet about to be enjoyed.'"

She pointed to the magazine's summation that "Law Enforcement seems to be losing the war against the Mob in Atlantic City just as the Mob's own internal struggle is escalating."

Oteri remarked that over 100 deaths have been attributed to struggles among assorted underworld factions for pieces of the casino action.

Oteri found more inspiration for hindsight in an article from The Transcript in Adams dated Feb. 21, 1977. In it, James E. Ritchie, former head of the Commission on the Review of the National Policy toward Gambling, and Jerome J. Vallen, dean of the College of Hotel Administration at the University of Nevada, said that "the social damages caused by legitimate gambling are no greater than what the public policy allows."

"Public policy in Las Vegas has not prevented its reigning spot on the F.B.I.'s list of metropolitan areas with the highest crime rate per capita. Public policies in Atlantic City and Reno have not prevented their ascendancies on the same list. A public policy which admits casinos must be prepared to welcome the general sleaziness associated with them. Atlantic City is now pleading for federal help to cope with its 'ripple effect' of casino related crime. All those promises of great public benefit are not doing much to help the public policy in that resort."

As an aside, Oteri remarked that Vallen is still on the stump, for MGM, speaking recently before the Cape Cod Chamber of Commerce.

"I hope somebody told him that our foresight has been reinforced by study of his previous remarks," she said.

"The only real choice the public has is to prevent the introduction of casinos. You can talk about 'learning from the experience of others' and 'building in safeguards' but you must be aware that Atlantic City believed those same cliches. They can promise a 'first-class, tasteful operation.' They just don't want to be reminded when they haven't been able to deliver."

To draw attention to the statewide implications of the introduction of casinos, Oteri said, "One way that the people of Massachusetts might come to identify more with the plight of residents on the South Shore and in the Berkshires would be to circulate a mobile casino, unannounced throughout the state, inspired by the theme 'round and round it goes, where it lands nobody knows.' Having to put up with such a facility in their own backyards would awaken people to the realities hiding behind all that glitter and glib talk. Right now Hull and Adams are supposed to be the sacrificial lambs for the cult of casino gambling, but it could happen to any town eventually."

"None of the bills to legalize casinos was sponsored by legislators from the areas to be affected. I often wonder why the legislative proponents of casino gambling never earmark their own hometowns for the so-called 'jackpot.' If they are really convinced that the benefits are so superb it seems that they owe them to their own constituents."

Big Bird sprouts feathers

Feathers are sprouting all over Big Bird in the Children's Room at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, thanks to the participants in the Library's Summer Reading Club.

For every 10 books read, a feather with the student's name is added to Big Bird and a certificate is awarded to the student. For the first 20 books read, a student is awarded a free paperback book.

These books are a special collection purchased for the annual reading program by the Friends of the Library.

As of this writing, 28 readers have earned a free book, and another 37 readers have earned certificates. Reading cards to keep track of titles read at the student's own reading level may be picked up at the library and must be endorsed by a parent.

The children's room staff has been kept happily busy with the reading activity. Popular titles for younger elementary students include "Sky Dog," a story of a boy and his special summer dog; "Freight Train" by Donald Crews; "Benjamin and Tulip," a story of two not-such-good friends; and Maurice Sendak's new book, "Outside, Over There." Then, of course, there are such old favorites as Beatrix Potter's, "Tale of Peter Rabbit;" "Mike Mulligan and His Steam Shovel;" "Curious George;" and "Tikki Tikki Tembo."

For upper elementary readers, there's Judy Blume's, "Superfudge;" David Macaulay's "Unbuilding;" a new book in the Katie John series entitled "Katie John and Heathcliff;" a recent science fiction thriller by Frank Bonham entitled "Forever Formula," as well as a good murder mystery entitled "Who Killed Christopher?"

School reading lists also suggest titles to keep students in practice, and the library does have both the lists on hand as well as a majority of the books listed.

There is well over a month left before the end of the Summer Reading Club Sept. 11. The library staff encourages all students to come in, browse and read. The library would like to award a free paperback book to every student in Cohasset.

Obituary

Gertrude Smith

Gertrude Tyler Smith, 78, of Fire Island and formerly of Boston and Cohasset, Mass., died August 1 in Brunswick Regional Hospital.

She was born in Boston. She was a member of the Georgetown Volunteer Fire Department and Historical Society.

She leaves seven cousins, Virginia DiNardo of Cohasset, Gregory C. Hunt and Timothy J. Hunt, both of Norwell, Arthur W. Hunt III of Fire Island, Mary Ellen Hunt of Naples, Fla., Margaret A. Hunt of Rindge, N.H. and Charles W. Hunt of Herndon, Va.

A graveside service was conducted August 7 in Cedar Grove Cemetery, Dorchester, Mass.

Arrangements are under the direction of Desmond Funeral Home, Bath.

Charles Waaser, one of two sea victims

Two people have drowned in Cohasset waters in a week's time.

The body of Patrick Hann of Medway has yet to be recovered. He was lost when a small boat capsized off Minot's Light August 4. The sea was rough and the visibility poor when the 10-foot outboard tipped over, two of his friends managed to reach the shore.

Charles Winslow Waaser of Beechwood Street drowned Sunday evening in an accident inside the harbor. He was climbing from his dinghy, only 100 yards off Government Island, onto his boat, a 23-foot slooped moored there, when he fell into the water.

The Rev. Edward Atkinson who saw Mr. Waaser fall rowed out to try to help him. By the time he reached the boat, Mr. Waaser was under water.

Attempts made by firefighters Edward Corbo and Richard Conley to dive down without equipment were unsuccessful. Conley was off-duty at the time.

Jack Sylvia, who came to the harbor with diving gear a short time later, recovered the body. Dr. Roger Pompeo, medical examiner, pronounced him dead at the scene after attempts to revive him failed.

Mr. Wasser, 62, was a strong swimmer who officials believe was knocked unconscious.

An avid sailor with a lifelong love of the sea, Mr. Waaser was a trustee and charter member of the Cohasset Sailing Club and for a number of years ran the winter Frostbite Sailing Dinghy racing program in Scituate Harbor. He was formerly a salesman for a number of Boston area companies and at the time of death was head of the shipping department of Gaffey

Grandma Moses

"I don't advise anyone to take it (painting) up as a business proposition, unless they really have talent, and are crippled so as to deprive them of physical labor. Then with help they might make a living. But with taxes and income tax there is little money in that kind of art for the ordinary artist,'' Grandma Moses, 1860-1961.

The 6 Most Common Excuses for Not Visiting A Doctor

Every year thousands of Americans suffer from serious diseases and health problems that should have been caught and treated during their early stages. Unfortunately, however, the victims did not have specialized health check-ups as recommended by health authorities. The frequent result — unnecessary pain and disablement.

Following are the six most frequently used excuses:
(1) "I was too busy to find time for an examination."
(2) "I don't like doctors. They scare me."
(3) "I read a lot, so I can pretty well diagnose my own problems."
(4) "I had a physical exam 3 years ago."
(5) "Doctors cost money, and we're trying to save."
(6) "I figure I'd go only if the disorder got worse."

If you have not had various specialized health examinations in the past 6 months, probably you have used one or more of the above excuses.

According to a survey taken by the American Chiropractic Association, it was learned that many people are aware of the fact that they need specialized health check-ups on a regular basis. They know the importance of taking care of their eyes, teeth, heart, lungs, spine and other weight-bearing structures. Yet, they make the common mistake of putting off health matters so long as a health problem is not apparent. And, unfortunately, some even do so after the need for attention is obvious. All the while they justify their actions with one or more of the six basic excuses.

It's easy to put one's health needs last [illegible] pain or disablement show up. Then it becomes just about the most important thing in one's life. That's why Chiropractic Physicians recommend spinal examinations on a regular basis. Likewise, as a conscientious member of the health team, the Chiropractic Physician recommends periodic check-ups of other critical points of the body by qualified specialists.

Basic skills testing is a state-mandated program where the local school department tests three grades for minimum competency levels in the areas of reading, writing, and mathematics. For grades 2 and 5, the system developed its own test, it used a state accepted test for grade 8. Hart explained that the school system is free to determine its own acceptable passing score, so that no valid comparison with students in other school systems is possible.

The results of the basic skills testing were: 95% of second graders passed the reading test, 89% passed the mathematics, 93% passed the writing test.

In grade 5, 100% passed the reading test, 98% passed in math, 97% in writing.

In grade 8, 95% passed in reading, 92% in math, 83% in writing.

School bus stops unknown

from Charles Pape. The buses, which cost $2,000 all together, have been leased in past years by the school system under a contract that will not be renewed.

The school system now owns seven buses that are deemed safe and operable. The current plan calls for seven routes.

Crowell said Registry officials inspected the buses last week. An eighth bus, which he described in the past as available for emergencies only, will not pass Registry inspection.

That bus is not one of the ones just purchased.

Last year 11 buses were used. Six were owned by the town and five leased from Pape.

"We're using the same buses the town has used over the last five years," Crowell said, commenting on the criticism from some parents about the age and condition of the buses.

"Let's say Proposition 2½ hadn't happened. We'd still be running the same buses."

He said the buses are little more than 10 years old.

Last year using the combination of leased and owned buses the cost of busing was over $100,000.

This year with the routes for students of the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools being combined and a system of bus stops changed, the cost will be $70,000.

"The busing won't change drastically for K through 6," Crowell said after the meeting. Except that the students will use the same buses.

"It will change for the older ones," he said.

But he pointed out that many of the older students don't use buses they are eligible for in good weather.

"At the high school a lot of our students have cars or mopeds. And some of the older ones prefer to walk with their friends or ride bikes."

He said he would be happier having the whole busing system leased out but that this system is less expensive.

"And we feel that this is the way we should go for this year."

He emphasized that this is an experiment and that next year something else may be tried.

The Wind's Tale

By Paul Steven Stone

Once there was an apartment in a city where two eyes looked out a window and watched the setting sun.

The eyes knew the sunset like an old friend. They knew its colors, and its changing moods. Each sunset was an old friend wearing new clothes.

There were other friends in the sky. The eyes watched them with the warm feeling old friends bring.

Seagulls fluttered through the reds and oranges of the sky.
They rode the wind,
and fought the wind,
and let the wind tell them its tale.
The wind had a sad tale to tell;
of a lonely ship lost at sea.
The seagulls laughed at the story anyway. For seagulls will laugh at anything.
The eyes dropped from the sky to the darkening shadows on the ground, to a tree.

This tree never laughed. It was a happy tree, but still it never laughed.
"It is not in my nature to laugh," it once explained.
That's why the wind sang to the tree, and saved its stories for other ears.

"Bobby?" the babysitter called. "What are you looking at?"
"Why ask him that?" another voice asked. "My brother can't tell you."

The eyes searched out the voices. But they were nowhere to be seen. The world of the eyes reached only to the corner of the room.

But there was adventure in that corner. The eyes had seen it. In the late afternoon when shadows fell.
Then, all the shapes that had been hiding could come out.
Evil villains chasing little children, herds of wild horses stampeding towards freedom, jungles bursting with uncaged animals.
And when the shadows melted into darkness the shapes would flee to the crowded sky. So many shapes, all puffed into shifting clouds.
Children running,
dogs chasing cats,
lambs searching for their mothers, sailboats racing out to sea.

The eyes grew sad. They remembered the wind's tale. They remembered the lonely sailboat lost at sea.

"Do you think he would like something to drink?" the babysitter asked.
"No," his brother answered. "I think he's happy just left alone."

Alone? Who's alone? The eyes looked to the night that was filling the window and the sky.
The night was an old friend. Sometimes it hid its beauty in black clouds, other times it wore its stars proudly as if to light a party.
But the night was best under a moon. It had so many moons to wear.
A moon to keep stars from getting lost.
A moon to light up the pond for winter skating.
A moon to lie in bed with you on nights when bad dreams came to shake tears from your eyes.
There was no moon tonight. The stars had asked to shine by themselves.

"Time for sleep," the babysitter said. "Please help me with him."
"Okay," his brother answered. "But lift him slowly. He likes to watch things as they go by."
"How do you know that?"
"I look into his eyes and they tell me things."

The eyes watched as a familiar face moved into view.
"Time to go to bed, Bobby," his brother said with a smile.
The eyes stared into the face,
into his brother's searching eyes.
In another world, the babysitter whispered, "The poor dear."
But his brother's eyes said, "Tell me what the sunset was like, Bobby."
Somewhere out in the night, a seagull laughed.
Maybe the wind's tale wasn't so sad after all.

Simplistic

By Patricia Desmond

My world was simpler
when we were in love black and white, 35 millimeter with snappy captions and glossy prints.
I was thinner then,
less matronly,
living on minutes,
washed in vulnerability,
mine and yours,
framed together
in some mistaken double exposure.
I thought you belonged inside my life,
I kept showing you
the photo of my dream:
you, me
cropped tight together,
I thought that simple scene could be our world.
I wished it so.
So I focused on my dream and busied myself with growing up, waiting, waiting for you.
You thought I belonged inside your life.
You kept showing me
the photo of your dream.
I stood in a corner on the negative, large enough to be recognized, and you dashed like a piece of dynamite in instant action to me, from me,
to others and beyond,
so far beyond, places I would never reach or come to know.
And now, light years after,
I look at my collection of grey-color memories of us and missed connections, thinking back,
smiling, not so thin or so simple as our time,
very long ago.

Fire Facts

House numbers are important.

Question: Is your dwelling or place of business properly numbered?

Question: If numbered, are the numbers of adequate size, pattern, and color to be easily read?

Question: Can the numbers be easily read from the street?

The numbering of buildings is a basic requirement for deliveries and routine service.

However, emergency services...Fire...Police... and Ambulance make the requirement of larger, most visible numbers, in sharp contrast to their background a must.

Generally, these numbers should be readily visible from the street and of size, pattern, and color that is easily read.

In places where more than one house is located on a single drive or way...the posting of readily visible numbers at the street entrance is a great aid in providing prompt service in an emergency.

If you had a no answer to any of the above questions please consider the above advice to ensure immediate response from your emergency services.

New shops breathe new life into Cohasset Village business

By Patricia Desmond

Business in Cohasset Village is making a strong comeback after a period of going out of business sales.

The only vacant shop today is the one Foreign Intrigue abandoned for a spot in Fanueil Marketplace.

Not too long ago the line of shops on South Main Street was dotted with empty store fronts. Merchants then seem depressed.

Now the new wave of shop owners are planning promotions, expansions, excitement.

Catering to the carriage trade is the watchword of the Village. Eugene Price, the South Main Street realtor and president of the Cohasset Village and Harbor Association, explained that Cohasset has long been able to attract outsiders to the town and its shops.

"It's a lovely ride by the seacoast," he said. And there are plenty of attractions for the tourists.

The problem of the past was getting local people to frequent the local businesses.

But the newer shop owners seem confident that they are able to do just that. And the volume of business in the Village seems to be increasing steadily.

Maybe it's optimism generaged by Reagan-economics, as one young businessman suggested. His view is that people alrady feel they have more money to spend just because they know the tax cut is on the way.

Price said part of the reason for the upswing is due to the enthusiasm of the new owners.

"Enthusiasm is contagious," he said with some of his own, clearly lingering in his words. He had rushed from an appointment with a customer to a real estate passing in Boston to a Rotary meeting in town to return a call to the Mariner.

He said the merchants are already talking about what they will do to decorate the Village for Christmas.

"That's a good sign," he commented.

He believes the high cost of energy has been a

Selectmen act on dog complaints

Faced with complaints about barking dogs, selectmen are looking into the legalities of two local and private kennels.

Dog Officer Richard Yocum told the board the licenses are available to residents for a fee.

His view is that as long as dogs are not boarded in the kennels, the operation is not commercial and is acceptible in a residential zone.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said she isn't sure the zoning bylaws allow kennels in residential areas. Planning Board Member Patricia Facey said she agrees with McArthur's reading.

The matter came to the selectmen's attention last Wednesday night in response to a letter of complaint written by Ruth McGinnis of 15 Windy Hill Road.

Mrs. McGinnis has complained to the dog officer, police department and selectmen about the dogs owned by the Haskells' at 19 Windy Hill Road.

Yocum said Katherine Haskell has a kennel license which entitles her to keep up to 25 adult dogs and an unlimited number of puppies under six months.

He said he considers the matter a "neighbor problem" having gone to the home on a few occasions without finding any problems.

He said his inspection of the kennel facilities along with the county dog officer found them to be

Corps near decision on Hanlon dredging

Pleasure boats in Cohasset Harbor may see a time next year when the channel is easily navigable at low tide.

The town has been trying to do something about the accumulated silt in the channel leading to Lawrence Wharf near Hugo's Lighthouse for more than a year.

Town meeting appropriated $9,000 to dredge the bottom for maintenance more than a year ago.

The work is still in limbo while various agencies study the plans and consider the environmental impact. Meanwhile, owners of some of the larger boats are stuck in port except at high tide.

The Army Corps of Engineers, one of the hold-ups, is almost ready to make a decision on the work. The Corps is soliciting public comments which should be sent to their office by Sept. 14.

A brief survey of people near the harbor found three people saying something along the line of why isn't it already done and two others wondering

A perfect topping for softball champs

Strawberry Parfait, the softball team that topped its league last year, finished the semi-finals of the South Shore Civic League in the top slot.

The deciding game was Saturday as the Cohasset team edged out the Hingham Police by five to four.

It was a game filled with tension and cliff-hanging plays.

The team was understandably high in the aftermath. They are now in the playoffs for the championship. The next game in the best five series for that title is at the Beechwood ball field Saturday, August 22, at 10 a.m.

Last Saturday's game was the fifth in a best of five series with the Hingham Police. The series was tied two-to-two.

At the bottom of the ninth, Hingham was leading, four-to-two. The first batter struck out. Jay Fiori walked. J. L. Murphy singled, putting runners at first and third.

Joe Pomarico came to the plate. He belted a homerun, bringing the score back to Cohasset's favor, winning the game.

David Pomarico coaches the team.

Other players include Paul Laugelle, Brian Noonan. Bob Malnati, Al Rose, Robert Swain, Bill

Cohasset's week

Kimball liquor license

The liquor license transfer for Kimball's By the Sea Motel went through without any quibbling last week.

The motel is under purchase and sales agreement from the estate of John Carzis to the Roy Corporation of Quincy, a company owned by a family that lives on Jerusalem Road.

At the brief hearing in the selectmen's chambers last Wednesday, Atty. Charles Humphreys explained that operation of the motel will reamin as it has been.

Renovations are planned to bring the motel into better repair. Landscaping and painting is planned but no construction.

Five members of the Roy family, John Roy Sr., his wife, Mary Lou, and sons, John Roy Jr., Steven Roy and Peter Roy, attended the transfer hearing. Steven will be the new manager, according to the documents approved by the selectmen.

The liquor license will be used as a pledge to secure financing with the company that presently holds the mortgage, the Scituate Federal Savings and Loan.

Henry Ainslie, chairman of the board, said he felt the town was fortunate to have a local family take over operation of the motel.

Humphreys said the family plans to run a better off-season business.

Grievance hearing

Selectmen will hold a grievance hearing tonight, Wednesday, August 19, on the creation of a position in the police department for a civilian dispatcher.

The job is filled by Yvette Rattenbury. Last year the same slot was filled by a member of the regular police force. The police union is protesting the change which was ordered to comply with budget reductions necessitated by Proposition 2½.

Game license

If they don't hear any reason why they shouldn't go ahead, selectmen will revoke the license for the Red Lion Inn's electronic game.

Police Chief John DeBassio, the selectmen's licensing agent, discovered the game in the restaurant was placed so that it blocked the emergency exit.

He ordered it moved and found there was no other location available in the business. Chief DeBassio told selectmen last week the game has been removed but since there is no other space for it, there is no reason to continue the license. Selectmen want a chance to hear from the owner before revoking the game license.

Heating systems bid

Bids for new heating systems for the house at Government Island and the Bates Building were taken under advisement by selectmen last week.

Two bids, from the same two companies, were submitted for the work.

Alco Oil Co. was low bidder for both with $2,960 for the Bates building and $3,251 for the house on Government Island.

Harbor Mechanical Contractors, the other bidder, suggested $4,950 for Bates and $3,990 for Government Island.

Town bylaws

Arthur Clark, the selectmen's executive secretary, is taking on the task of getting the various town bylaws back in print.

Members of the town bylaw study committee met with selectmen last week and expressed surprise that other officials expected them to handle the job.

Cornelia O'Malley, chairman of the committee, said her group saw their task as being responsible for updating the town bylaws, not the zoning bylaws or various regulations established by different boards.

She said her group would like to see the printed bylaws of all sorts done in a uniform way so that a looseleaf binder might replace the hardbound approach of old.

With a looseleaf binder the bylaws could be updated more easily in the future.

Patricia Facey of the planning board explained that because town meeting appropriated $750 for the bylaws committee a few years ago, other boards, like her own, have been unable to get approval for funds to print their portions of the bylaws.

The zoning bylaw is out of print currently.

James Litchfield, town building inspector, said Monday he is happy to see the problem resolved since he spends much extra time going over portions of the zoning bylaw with real estate people.

While he was commenting Clark and Mrs. Facey were closetted in the selectmen's office, working out the details.

Later Clark said he expects it will take him about a week to gather portions of the various bylaws and regulations from the committees and boards involved so that he can get bids on the print job.

Insurance policy

The company that sold the town its basic life insurance coverage on town employes wants to offer more coverage for less money.

The selectmen are thinking the matter over.

The base is $2,000 with the low bidder for the coverage being American Health and Life Insurance Company.

A spokesman for the company said his firm wants to give employes the option of taking another $5,000 in coverage for the same price as the first $2,000, which is already lower than the premiums in effect.

New life for Cohasset Village

boon to local business.

"It's 15 miles to Hanover Mall and another 15 miles back," he said. "With the time and the gas, a lot of people are beginning to realize they can do just as well shopping in town."

But the advantage of the local businesses isn't just a matter of pinching pennies. The real plus is the extra service, personal approach and high quality.

"Carriage trade is a word we use," Price explained. "Most of the shops offer a speciality service and if there's something you want that they don't have, they'll order it for you.

"Try to ask a department store manager to get something special.

"Everything now is automated. We're getting rid of that, going back to an older time, a time where you were treated more like a customer instead of excess baggage."

One of the promotions planned for the near future is a sidewalk sale to be held before Labor Day.

Ellen Morrissey of Tides Inn said her own approach to the market is one of constantly upgrading her merchandise.

Her specialty is armoires of various styles and periods which she mirrors to create a piece of furniture that can move out of the bedroom to a more functional place.

Her shop, which sells what she calls collectibles, carries handmade clothing, Dedham pottery, Cohasset tray tables, some furnishings, etc.

Roger's Music is one of the newest in the Village. His line of sheet music and instruments can't be found in the area.

Collegiate Travel Service, another of the newest in town, opened to the tune of strolling minstrels and other promotional deals about a week ago. The travel service is in the lilac building, long the home of the Social Service League.

The Wooden Nickel, near Colonial Pharmacy, another of the fairly recent openings offers specially crafted wooden furniture.

Bob Fesler, who owns Cards and Shards, took over the operation of Kit and Kaboodle about a month ago.

And Cohasset Central Market became the property of Phil Nectow back a few months ago. The new management there is younger and more competitive, according to shoppers. The same personal approach of the older owners is the reason customers keep coming back.

Price said he thinks one of the catalysts was the opening of the Village Shoe Sop back last year at a spot that had gone vacant for some time.

Unfortunately it's impossible to mention every new business in town. They all seem to have unique characteristics and a hopeful hard-working owner.

Harbor dredging

whether there would be room for more boats after the dredging.

The answer is no. The dredging is a relatively small job, designed just to put the docking area back at a depth where navigation is simple.

About 750 cubic yards of mud and silt would be removed from an area 80 by 140 feet. The area is fan shaped, according to the plan. The dredings woulc be deposited in the town landfill.

Arthur Clark, selectmen's executive secretary, said one of the delays in accomplishing the work more quickly was the requirement that the silt be tested to make sure there were not high concentrations of heavy metals. The tests have been done.

"And you need approval of the conservation comission, the CZM, besides the Army Corps of Engineers," Clark pointed out.

If the Corps does grant the permit — which local officials expect will happen — the permit will authorize periodic dredging to maintain the depth attained by the work for the next 10 years.

The depth at mean sea level around the two floats of Lawrence Wharf will range from eight to twelve feet. Right now the floats have depths as small as four-and-a-half feet at mean sea level, according to the plan on file with the Corps of Engineers.

More information on the project can be obtained from Ralph Atkinson at the New England Division, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 424 Trapelo Road, Waltham, 02254. Comments may be sent to him.

He can be reached at 894-2400, ext. 332.

School registration now underway

The Cohasset Public Schools will hold registration for all students entering the system from 9 a.m. to 12 noon daily, according to the following schedule:

Wednesday, Aug. 19, through Wednesday, Sept. 2.

Students or parents are urged to phone for an appointment to assist administrators in making the registration as smooth as possible.

Call the Joseph Osgood School at 383-6117 for Grades K-3; the Deer Hill School at 383-6115 for Grades 4-6; and the high school guidance office at 383-6102 for Grades 7-12.

Winn requests reinstatement

Bart Winn, a former Cohasset police officer, wants to be reinstated as a permanent intermittent patrolman.

The selectmen are considering his request. He worked for the town from 1966 to 1974, transfered to Scituate where he worked until 1979 and now works in private security. He would be interested in night or weekend work.

Leaning anti

It's wonderful to hear that Gov. Edward King is leaning in the anti-casino direction after having visited Atlantic City.

As the Governor said last week, you can't pick up a newspaper in that resort city without reading about some new investigation or charges in connection with the casino construction there.

For so long the governor's office refused to be specific about his stand on the issue. And even his current statement seems vague and shadowy — neutral or less than neutral, in his own words.

The Mariner feels strongly that a casino in Hull would be a mistake the people of Hull and surrounding towns would pay for — no matter what financial promises were made ahead of time.

The people of Atlantic City heard the same rose colored statements. They are left with sky-rocketing crime, fast-multiplying taxes and the knowledge that local politicians were less than upright in the dealings.

Figures in the world of the underworld have long been associated with the dealings in gaming operations wherever they have been legalized. We think Massachusetts has enough crooks of its own. We don't need to find new ways to attract shady characters.

We don't think gambling is always a sign of crime. There are churches and civic organizations that have been running Bingo parlors successfully for years. The people that frequent bingo operations are often the older, more lonely people. It is a social occasion for them as well as a chance to win a little excitement and maybe a dream.

But the small time operations that bingo or beano create are a far cry from the sort of casino envisioned for Hull.

The studies show the people in the casinos of Atlantic City are for the most part blue collar workers. We guess the high rollers still travel to the casinos in the Caribbean and Monte Carlo. We don't expect Monaco is going to be the chief competitor of Hull. In fact the people with MGM Grand expect the casino goers will come from a circle 160 miles wide.

It's true Hull needs a stronger tax base. But as the casino opponents keep saying the money brought in by gambling is fool's gold. The cost in terms of increased police protection and other necessary services will offset the income.

Some people in Hull favor the idea simply because they expect it will greatly increase the value of their property.

Land speculators will make a fortune in Hull just as they did in Atlantic City.

The way to a stable economy is not the fast-buck and one-shot construction. Building a stable economy takes planning.

Business in Cohasset, Hingham and Hull does need some new vital life blood. What it doesn't need is a life surviving parasitically off the blood of hapless gamblers.

On this day a happy ending

By Patricia Desmond

It was mid-August and thoughts of schooltime were sprinkling the children like a soft summer rain.

July looked wistful these days. Perhaps that was because she only brushed her hair when the spirit of the Great Earth Mother or the shrill harping of Super Mom told her to do it.

Young girls of eleven always seem to look wistful when they are unkempt.

"He kicked me," July shouted, breaking the relative silence, caused by the hum of the wondrous electronic tube.

Mit just smiled. Admitting guilt without a syllable.

"Well if it hurts, cry," Super Mom said in her best wisdom. "Otherwise be quiet. Don't do it again Mit."

Gosh and Wren were outside playing. That reduced the noise level, anyway. The mighty bear cartoons reduced it again.

But Mit couldn't abide peace and quiet. After all he was two-and-a-half. Going on eleven.

"Can we go buy my school clothes now," July asked, obviously observing that the grey and gloomy clouds overhead made this Saturday an unbeach day. There had been too many of those unbeach days already this season.

"Is your room picked up," Super Mom answered.

"It's almost done," July hedged. "I'll finish it if we can go. This is boring."

"It's a deal," Super Mom immediately wondered whether she could bribe Gosh into playing baseball with Mit while she shopped.

Gosh settled that in a flash. His demand for double time pay because of hazardous duty (his regular pay was minimum wage plus certain fringes), made it unlikely she could afford both the shopping trip and babysitter.

"Inflation," she mumbled along with some other words under her invisible breath.

She grabbed Mit's travel bag, a large thing made from green cloth which held a second set of clothes for accidents, diaper wipes, two toys, a sweater and his baseball glove.

"Is your room clean yet, July?" she yelled out.

"Almost," the sweet and intransient child replied.

Super Mom looked into the room.

"Get out of here, this is private," July screamed.

There were clean clothes heaped on a chair in the corner, it appeared to be two weeks' supply of underwear and clean play outfits.

Scattered on the floor were: other clothes, clearly worn and soiled, empty candy wrappers, a half-eaten apple, parts of several games, and the dog who was scratching miserably for fleas.

July was sitting in the middle of the heap of condemnable property, her hair uncombed, as usual, petting the dog, Fleabag.

Super Mom controlled the urge to commit an act of child abuse. That's why she was called Super Mom. Like every other mother she had moments of extreme fury directed toward her children. But she'd been able to keep from maiming anyone so far.

She wondered whether someone would take her special name away from her someday.

"Clean up this room and if you're finished by 3 p.m. (it was 10:30 a.m.) we'll get your new clothes. If it's not finished by 5 p.m., you'll go to bed at 8 o'clock." There was more than an edge of anger in her voice. There was a double-edged Samari.

July started to cry.

"I can't clean it up. It takes too long," she sobbed, her face reddening, her eyes turning on like a water faucet.

"Maybe you can finish it tomorrow then," Super Mom said. "But it's going to be done before you do one more thing outside this room."

She wondered what smarter parents do when faced with the same inevitability.

Dr. Spock was silent on the subject of impossible situations and she thought he was too far removed from the reality of anything but disease anyway.

"What would Ghandi do," she mused.

"More to the point, what will I do?"

She walked out of the room, realizing she would not be going shopping and that July would be crying for sometime to come.

Inside the bedroom, July remained determined. She threw a book against the wall, looking for some more attention.

"One more outburst in there and you're going to bed now," Super Mom yelled from the kitchen where she was making coffee and trying to keep hold of some composure. She knew she wouldn't make July go to bed right then anyway. She hoped July wouldn't know that too, she hoped she would give in just a bit. She wondered how a day that was supposed to be a pleasant shopping trip had ended in such a tearful stalemate.

After drinking three cups of black, South American coffee, she decided to make a friendly gesture.

Super Mom walked back into July's bedroom.

"I'll help as long as you're working too," she said.

July smiled. And the story ended happily, for that day.

Letters

Confusing 'observation with supposition'

To the Editor:

In last week's Mariner, Hingham resident Frederick Cole made public his letter to a Hull Selectman.

In it was his "observation" that "some silver is crossing the palms of some individuals." He was referring to those who favor a hotel casino for Hull. I suggest that Mr. Cole is confusing "observation" with "supposition."

For example, Ptolemy and the Greeks 'supposed' there were seven stars in the heavens, and that the stars revolved musically in fixed spheres. They arrived at this conclusion partly because they liked circles but mainly because they were observing the subject from a single angle, earth. It was therefore natural to conclude that their observatory, earth, was the center of the universe, and that all above revolved around it. (I think they added the idea of music because of its romantic appeal.)

Well, after more than a thousand years this charming fallacy had been repeated enough times and for long enough to have become an article of faith, a dogma not to be questioned.

But it had not become fact.

Neither can Mr. Cole, by repeating this favorite and recurring theme in CACG (Citizens Against Casino Gambling) rhetoric, make it fact that casino proponents and the Hull town official whom he addressed in his letter have been bought off. When his "observation" can give a little more detail on the time and place those in question were "observed" taking silver, the amount of silver, and from whom to whom, it may be considered as some kind of evidence. But until then it can be no more than the Ptolemaic system of the heavens turned out to be, a cute idea, and quite clever considering their limited knowledge of the world.

Perhaps CACG have learned from ancient history that advancing a fallacy assertively enough, for long enough, can give it a semblance of truth, can even pick up support from some receptive ears. However, it has yet to succeed in making fact out of fiction.

Or could it be that lacking cogent argument to support their position they find it easier to attack the person, rather than the issue?

Blame it on Mark Twain

By Paul Steven Stone

I had planned to write about old friends. I'd even sat down at my typewriter, rolled in the paper, and typed out "Old Friends" by Paul Steven Stone, figuring that the weight of a title would stir up the breeze that so far ignored the tiny canvas of my literary sailboat.

Suddenly ...

"I've never seen such an appetite for 'suddenlys' and 'all of a suddens' and 'then the next moments' in all my life," a voice said with a kind air of amusement. "You'd be wise to invest in a pair of spectacles, then events wouldn't arrive so wrapped and mysterious."

"Look," I answered this stranger who was no stranger, "you've already caused enough trouble. Let me do my work."

Mark Twain ruminated on that suggestion. He padded about my room, puffing on his cigar like it contained the fragile thread of his thoughts. Finally, he stepped up beside me, and leaned again over the typewriter.

"What were you thinking of saying about 'old friends'?" he asked.

"I don't know," I told him truthfully. "Whatever came to mind, I suppose."

"Hmm," he intoned, still remarking the sheet that boasted "Old Friends" by Paul Steven Stone. "You could do an inventory, set it up with categories: 'Old Friends I Like,' 'Old Friends Who Owe Me Money,' 'Old Friends Who Sleep With Their Socks On'."

I sat back and turned to my tormentor.

"Okay. What is it you want from me?"

The white mane pulled away from my typewriter.

"Son," he said, not unkindly, "it wasn't my idea to come here. If you knew the freight for reassembling this corporal image of mine, you'd marvel that I didn't use the telephone. No, you brought me here, and if I seem a bit chaffy it's only because I was about to feast on the sight of a politician presenting his credentials to St. Peter when you called me."

"Me?" I questioned. "I sent for you?"

He flicked the ash from his cigar into my trash can.

"Lost me a good seat, too. Right next to the lie detector. But I don't hold that against you."

"All I did was make the mistake of reading some of your essays," I explained.

"Ahh," he sighed, cocking an eyebrow into a high arch. "And then you sat down to write 'Old Friends' by Paul Steven Stone?" The bent frame covered in white linen and topped by an unrully nest of bleached and bristly hair started circumnavigating the rug in my office. "Well that explains it," he said, puffing out the words through his cigar. "It's that damned Central Muse Answering Service again."

"Central Muse Answering Service?"

He stopped and waved a disgusted gesture towards the ceiling.

"This isn't the first time either," he said, his voice approaching a growl. "Every time a writer gets constipated — in a literary sort of way, of course — those thugs, those trogolodytes, those gravel-grained muffins in Central Muse look to each other, wink — no small feat with all the motes and beams left unbestirred in their squinty eyes — and then punch out 'Send Mark Twain' on the central computer. You'd think a body would get used to dematerializing from the heavenly spheres in such service after a while, but he doesn't."

"Maybe I should choose a different subject, though 'Old Friends' seemed reasonable enough. There's something about the summer that seems to recall old friends."

"To mind?"

"Yes. And in a physical sense as well. We've had visits this past week ..."

"Well, don't let me disturb you," Mark Twain said. "Pretend that I'd never written a single jot. Hove to a course that might have kept the world in the dark ages of literature. I won't mind. I've been ignored by the best of your breed."

"But that's just it," I replied. "So much has been lost. Quality, beauty, the richness of a humor that doesn't need a laugh track. You were the sun, and now we've got a thousand candles going around pretending they have the power to light the world."

"And you?"

"A candle in the act of discovering his limitations."

"Ah well, then this trip hasn't been wasted after all," Mark Twain said. "Truth is the seed from which the flower of literature will naturally rise. Writers — and all manner of similar strugglers — get into trouble from trying to grow their flowers from borrowed seeds. Not that truth ever changes, mind you; it just takes on the shading and scent of whomever it passes through. So trying to borrow someone else's truth is like building a house using an architect's blueprint for Penn Station. You can do it, I suppose, but what will you use for furniture?

"Where are you going?" he asked, noticing that I was rising from my chair.

"Out to mow the lawn," I answered.

"And 'Old Friends by Paul Steven Stone' ...?"

"Will have to wait for another day."

An imp creeped up into Mark Twain's face and lit his wizened features.

"And I know just what to tell those chipmunk-minded movers of inoffensive heavenly spirits back at Central Muse," he beamed.

"What?"

"Why the truth, of course — that your lawn needed to be mowed."

"And that makes you happy? ' I asked.

"Not especially," he answered. "But if I hurry I'll get back in time to hear the politician list all the kind things he did for his mother when he was alive. These days I thrive on simple pleasures."

A family casino connection

By Beth Harling

"The history of the push to legalize casino gambling in New England reads like a study of the Dragone family tree," says Carol Oteri, president of Citizens Against Casino Gambling, Inc.

Her remarks were intended to draw attention to efforts by the Dragones to establish casinos in many other New England locations, in addition to sites in the Berkshires and on the South Shore in Massachusetts.

"A March 5 issue of the Hartford Courant noted that a bill to legalize casinos in Connecticut was 'drafted and introduced at the behest of the Connecticut Leisure Corp., and its principals, Joseph and Leon Dragone," says Oteri.

The father-and-son team of Springfield entrepreneurs also operates as Greylock Associates, which is part of a joint venture, MGM Grand/Greylock, trying to put casinos in Hull and Adams.

Connecticut Leisure Corp., listing still more Dragone family members as officers, has designated Hartford and Bridgeport as potential casino homes and seeks to resurrect their bill in the 1982 Connecticut legislature, despite its 14-0 defeat in March by the Public Safety Committee.

Last Fall plans by Greylock Associates to obtain an option on a proposed casino site in Catskill, N.Y. were outlined. At that time another location near Salem, N.H., was also mentioned.

Previously published reports credited Greylock Associates with unsuccessful drives to promote casinos in Vermont, northern Maine, Acapulco, Mexico and on Patience Island in Narragansett Bay, R.I.

They must be trying to convince each one of their targeted towns to "build a casino before someone else does." They attempt to trigger the defense mechanisms of tourism centers, failing to mention that they are intentionally fabricating the supposed competition.

Does anyone really believe that the legalization of casinos in one state would cause promoters to scuttle other deals also designed to draw from the New York to Canada market? As long as they can get in first they won't worry about cutting the gambling pie into smaller and smaller pieces.

Promoters of casinos keep coming back, hoping for a warmer reception. The governor of Rhode Island has told them "no." Newport voted four to one against the casino concept. The governor of New Hampshire also threatened to veto any casino bills. The chairman of Connecticut's Public Safety Committee accused casino proponents of wanting "to make a quick, great profit and sell the state down the tubes."

Gov. King has insisted on an area referendum which would guarantee that a decision on casino gambling would be made by all the residents of a region, not just those in one town. This is standard protocol when considering dog or horse tracks. New York's attorney general has called for an "indefinite postponement of consideration of casino gambling," citing overwhelming evidence of the problems associated with it.

Right now casino backers are stating on radio talk shows that "people on the Cape want casino gambling." Yet, Rep. Thomas K. Lynch recently published a compilation of all the anti-casino correspondence received by his office, indicating no shift in the Cape's long-standing opposition to casinos. If Massachusetts doesn't continue to emphasize family oriented tourist activities we will attract too many people of the wrong type, imposing impossible burdens on the families who do much to perpetuate the distinctive characteristics for which this state is famous.

☐Bernard Caughey, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Caughey, Sr. of Pond St., graduated from the Cheshire Academy, Cheshire, Conn. this spring and will attend Norwich University in the fall.

Herbert Crehan

☐Herbert Crehan of Cohasset and a member of the Boston office of the Hay Group has been elected a partner of the firm.

He began Hay's New England Actuarial Benefit Division in 1973. During his 15-year consulting career, Crehan has been employed with various organizations throughout the United States and Bermuda.

He is a graduate of Northeastern University, with membership in the honor fraternity Sigma Episilon Rho, and is a member of the American Academy of Actuaries.

Crehan and his wife, Karen, have three children.

☐Ellen Morrissey had a summer sunset party last Thursday night at the Ledges in Hull. A number of Cohasset notables were there enjoying a great mid-summer's night.

☐Bob Baggs, of Scituate, caught an 800-pound blue fin tuna while fishing off Gloucester and brought it into Cohasset Harbor last weekend.

☐George Roukounakis, owner, operator of Olympic Texaco in the Center, is also a professional soccer player; he learned to play the sport while living in Greece. Last summer he played for the San Jose Earthquakes as right wing, and this summer he is playing semi-pro.

☐The Cohasset Sailing Club held their annual clambake last weekend, and Alan Cooke is quoted as calling it the social event of the summer even though the sun didn't shine.

☐James Corcoran finished first in the recent Gun Rock Regatta. James, who owns Sea Shore painters, has done a beautiful job painting the Dean and Hamilton Realty building. David Hassen did the new wood carving sign that will hang out front.

☐Michael Blakey has been having a great summer flying his friends back and forth to Nantucket and the Islands.

☐Happy birthday to Diane Keller who turned 16 Aug. 13. She and her sister Yvonne served a luncheon that day at Linda Halloran's. The luncheon was held in honor of Joanne Nawn who is on a visit from her home in Texas where she is now going for her degree in sociology. She's probably best known in this area for once writing "Around Town" and her famous Chinese dinners.

The invited guests included Roseanne Ring, Ellen Wolf, Marie Johnston, Suzy Crough, Roberta Raffa, Joan Mulcahey and Edward Brousseau.

☐Tina Watson has some beautiful pottery on display in her Pottery Loft and would love everyone to go up and say hello.

☐The aforementioned Roseanne Ring is looking for volunteers in the Mass. Eye and Ear Clinic.

☐Birthday greetings to David Marr who turned three years old recently.

☐Hannah Clinton won the Hill's Trophy in the South Shore Women's 210 class in the Hingham eliminations.

☐Chris Colocousis has completed his training for basic military skills at the Army ROTC camp at Fort Knox, Kentucky.

☐The Cohasset Recreation Department's Youth Band did a great job with their performance. I especially liked "Tomorrow."

Committee appointments

At a meeting of the Troika, the chairman of selectmen the chairman of the advisory committee and the moderator, at 7:45 a.m. Thursday, Aug. 6, the following appointments were made, each for a full three-year term ending in 1984:

Members of the Advisory Committee

Osborn Ingram of Beechwood Street, a reappointment, and Nelson Pratt, Jr. of North Main Street.

Member of the Drainage Advisory Committee

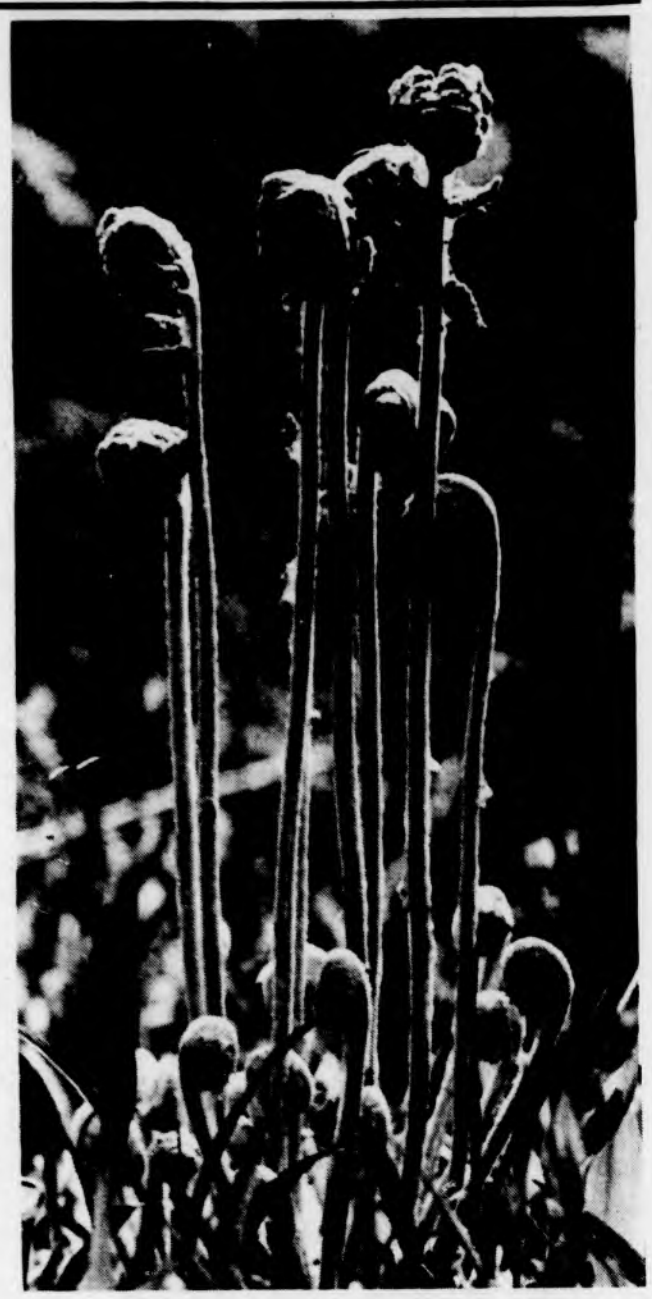
Milton Higgins of Border St., a reappointment.

Member of the Design Review Board

Elizabeth Hoopes of Lantern Lane, current board chairman.

Members of the Committee to Survey Structure and Functions of Town Government

Richard Silvia of Beechwood Street, and Francis J. Mitchell of Brewster Lane, a reappointment.



Ambulance fees change nixed

Selectmen last week tabled a letter from Medicompts of Canton for ambulance fee collection.

Right now the collection is handled by Blake Thaxter's office after bills are ignored.

The Medicompts plan would involve an increase in the ambulance fee to make the system profitable. Selectmen are uninterested.

They do want to cut down on the number of ambulance fee abatements, however.

Last Wednesday the board approved a long list of abatements, where collection efforts had failed. The old ambulance fee was $25 and many of the uncollectibles were for that amount. The more recent fee is $75, according to fire officials.

Murray files for district court change

Cohasset is an island of Norfolk in Plymouth County.

That means the police must trek to Quincy for any court cases, passing Hingham Court eight miles before they reach the halls of district court justice.

There's no current attempt to realign the county lines but there is an attempt pending in the legislature to change the court lines.

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray has a bill to move the district court cases for Cohasset from Quincy to Hingham, a move designed to save the town energy and police coverage.

The selectmen voted unanimously last week to back the bill, saying Hingham Court is less crowded than Quincy, distance aside.

Hull resident seeks auxiliary police position

A retired man in his late 30's who lives in Hull wants to be an auxiliary police officer in Cohasset. No pay is involved.

Selectmen, noting the regulations call for town residents unless there are exceptional conditions, are reluctant to appoint Louis Saklad who sold a business out West and moved to Hull. There is no auxiliary force in Hull, which is why the man wants to join the one in Cohasset.

He will be invited to meet with selectmen Wednesday, September 9 at their meeting.

Selectmen continue street light study

Selectmen still have street lights on hold.

It will be a few more weeks before the board can arrange to tour the town to study the lighting question.

The board's original plan to turn off a third of the street lights was abandoned when the price of electricity did not go up as much as expected.

But there is not enough money in the street light account to keep all the lights glowing all year long.

Used car sale

Randy's Mobil Service Station on Route 3A will seek approval from the board of appeals for sale of used cars.

Two weeks ago the selectmen granted a second class auto dealer's license for the limited sale of used cars. Last Wednesday the board rescinded the vote due to a technical problem. The appeals board must grant a special permit first.

U. N. Day chairman

Anyone interested in the job of unpaid program chairman of the town's United Nations Day celebration should apply to the selectmen's office.

Saturday, Oct. 24, is U.N. Day.

New street name

Twin Oaks Way may spring up along Beechwood Street.

Richard Farwell who owns property along Beechwood Street wants to give his driveway a street name and number his house 22.

Selectmen have no objection to the plan, as long as there is no duplication.

Cohasset broker Jane Crocker honored

A Cohasset real estate broker is among six Gallery of Homes eligible to receive the firm's John T. Nothnagle Founders Scholarship.

Jane Crocker of the Gallery of Homes of the South Shore Cohasset Office became eligible for the honor last fall when fellow students at an intensive Successful Practices course voted her "Honor Student of the Week."

Honor students are judged in part on their contributions of ideas and experience to the program, their willingness to help other students, their own classroom performance and on having a positive professional attitude.

Mrs. Crocker has been a broker for four years. She attended Derby Academy and Thayer Academy and graduated from the Leland Powers School of Radio, Television and Theatre. She is also a graduate of the Gallery of Homes of the South Shore's Basic Real Estate Practice course and holds her GRI (Graduate Realtors Institute) designation. She is a member of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors and has served on its Equal Opportunities Committee.

Mrs. Crocker is the president of the Cohasset Garden Club and has just completed a term as vice president and secretary of the Junior League of Boston, Inc.

Octoberfest is Septemberfest

Cohasset Community Center has a one-day beer and wine license for its Septemberfest on Saturday, September 19, on Cohasset Common and the community Center across the street.

In the past the event was known as Octoberfest. But the date has been moved up.

Ptl. Doyle leaves for MIT job

Patrolman Gerald Doyle never filed a grievance over the selectmen's decision not to grant his requested leave of absence.

But then he never did submit a letter of resignation either. He just left for his new job with the MIT security police.

The police union did file a grievance over the decision, which will reach step four of the procedure which involves a meeting of the police chief, selectmen and chairman of the personnel board.

Landfill is now accepting aluminum

The Cohasset Recycling Committee announced this week that the recycling center at the town landfill on Cedar Street, is now accepting aluminum.

Acceptable items are: aluminum cans, and cleaned aluminum foil and baking containers. If there is any doubt as to what cans are aluminum, the monitors at the recycling center will show you how to sort.

The Committee sincerely hopes Cohasset residents will be enthusiastic about the aluminum recycling, especially since it is another good source of income which will retain the recycling center, as well as help ease the landfill lifespan problem.

Dog complaints prompt action

kept properly.

Mrs. Haskell has four adult German shepherds and four puppies. She became a breeder back in 1976.

Yocum said he's gone to the property when complaints have come in and he has not found the dogs barking.

The other complaint involving a local kennel was brought up by Yocum. He complained that Frances Walton of 8 Forest Ave. is operating a kennel illegally.

Mrs. Walton has a kennel license for four dogs. Yocum said he saw eight there when he went to inspect the property.

He said some dogs on the property were not Mrs. Waltons.

"I believe she's boarding dogs," he said.

Mrs. Walton told him she wasn't boarding the dogs, she was keeping them for friends, Yocum related.

The selectmen took no action on any of the dog complaints.

Meanwhile Yocum already has problems with his budget. The funds set aside for impounding strays come to $500, or enough to impound 11 strays at the $44 a dog charged by Shishone Kennel of Marshfield.

Summer neighbor ... a short story

By Marion Sherman

Everyone called her "the witch." She was perhaps a bit eccentric. The always long flowing skirts, the shawl wrapped around her shoulders. Those endless lengths of beads about her neck and the ever present scarf topping her head of long black hair.

Arts Page

To the children at the beach perhaps she seemed their idea of a witch. Probably because of the many cats and kittens constantly following her around the yard. Added to her menagerie were two German Shepherds kept tied to the side door of the small, blue summer cottage. Even the adults in the neighborhood advised me to be wary of her. It seems she always kept to herself, which led them to believe she was somewhat odd. I wondered if anyone had ever really bothered to get to know her. Oh, well, I decided, don't get yourself involved in petty neighborhood affairs. Her aloofness, nonetheless, was rather a challenge to my inquisitive nature.

I questioned the local milkman, who left his wares at both our summer places. He informed me that besides the dogs and cats she also kept several birds inside the house. He claimed she allowed them to fly freely about the place. I began to speculate that perhaps there were a few bats in the house also. I imagined peering in the windows at dusk, seeing them flitting from rafter to rafter.

Now I was beginning to think like the children. This was my first summer at Gull Point and I was determined to put idle gossip aside and enjoy the rest and sea air as my doctor had ordered.

The pressures of my business and personal problems had become too much this past winter. I was warned that if I didn't get a much needed rest, I would become more seriously ill.

So I kept telling myself to relax and enjoy my stay here at the beach, only to find myself peering out my kitchen window, straining for a glimpse of my mysterious neighbor. This woman was beginning to fascinate me. At first, as I watched her stride up the narrow roadway dividing our homes, I thought her a tall woman. Then as time went on, I realized that this was an illusion she imparted as she walked so perfectly erect, almost regally. She would proceed along the path, kittens in her arms, cats following behind as though they were her devoted servants. Her long skirt always whipped about her long legs as she continued on her determined journey. On her return trip, I noted that both arms were free of the small kittens. The look on her face gave the impression she was well pleased with herself and had accomplished whatever goal she had set out to do.

As evening came on, the youngsters would congregate on my porch. We would watch the sailboats returning to the harbor in the golden cast of the sun setting over the rows of small cottages.

The conversation would always get around to our Mrs. Moore-Jones. That was the name of our local witch and I wondered at the double name. I soon learned from my little neighbors the reason she had two names was because she had two husbands. Or so said the children at the beach.

They claimed she used both names to show no favoritism between the two lucky gentlemen. If everyone knew this piece of gossip, I wondered how this news escaped the supposed husbands in question.

During the three months I stayed at the Point, I never did see either gentleman and the mystery continued to gather further intrigue for me.

I then became determined to get to know this woman. One day, as our lady strode back from her mission, I thought, now I'll speak. "Good afternoon, haven't we been fortunate to have had such a run of good weather?" She glanced in my direction, muttered something I could not understand and marched into her cottage all the while looking as severe and cold as I sensed a true witch would look.

It was with this response I decided not to let her coldness keep me from enjoying my summer retreat. No wonder the neighbors shunned this woman, I thought to myself.

She was not going to make me feel depressed. I didn't need any further depression in my life. I had had quite enough this past year and this summer was to be my salvation.

Towards the end of the summer I began to feel that familiar tenseness welling inside me. The thought of leaving this quiet simple existence was becoming unbearable. The headaches returned. One afternoon I lay on my porch lounge hoping that sleep would dull the throbbing in my head. I dozed but after a short time was brusquely awakened by the barking of dogs. Will they ever stop; won't someone put them inside and stop that awful noise? I got up from my cot and in frustration called across the street to the dogs to be quiet. They apparently were not paying any attention to me, but their owner certainly was. In seconds she was at my door, a fierce look of anger on her face, demanding that I never shout at her animals again. It was people like me, she continued, who made her appreciate her simple little friends more than ever. With that pronouncement she turned on her sandaled heels, skirt swinging, and literally marched back to her coven.

Two of my young friends were standing in the road and witnessed the scene. They rushed up to me with fearful looks on their small faces. "Aren't you afraid the witch will put a curse on you now," called Jimmy. "Aren't you scared she'll do something to you? Don't you know that she has trained the dogs to attack and aren't you afraid the dogs will come after you when you come out of the cottage?"

Little Joey frantically added. "Mrs. Cameron, do you know why the witch takes those kittens down the road? Well, she takes them to the inlet around the bay and puts them in sacks and drowns them." So that was why she always came back empty handed, kittenless, I thought. I couldn't let the children know that I was beginning to believe all their eerie stories of witchcraft and bats flying around.

I now found myself with such a painful headache that I told them to be off as I returned to my bed. Nearly an hour later I heard a slight tap on my door.

Oh, children, please let me rest. The tapping persisted and I rose from my bed and opened the door.

Startled, I found myself staring into the face of my Mrs. Moore-Jones. This time she had a half smile on her lips, and as my eyes dropped to her hands she gently pushed forward a small yellow crock.

"My dear, my dogs can become bothersome at times and the look on your face earlier showed the pain you must have been feeling," she said. "You have tried to be friendly to me this summer and I apologize for my rudeness. I, too, have not been well this past year. Perhaps you are not aware that I lost my son and my husband in an automobile accident a year ago. I came here last summer to get away from the memories and I'm afraid I have been so involved with my own grief that I have kept myself from associating with the summer people. They all seem so happy and my sadness would only cloud their summer pleasure. When I saw your discomfort I realized that it was time I stopped thinking of myself. Perhaps some of my clam chowder will help you feel better. I hope it can make up for Alex and Max's keeping you from your rest."

I murmured my thanks, nervously, and took the small crock from her long delicate hands.

With a warm, gentle smile she bade me good day and turned back to her little blue house. I could find no words to express my sympathy, but somehow I think she understood how I felt.

As I sipped the delicious broth, the two little boys sat anxiously watching. "Are you really going to eat that soup? Aren't you afraid she's poisoning you," asked Jim.

"If it was me," chimed Joey, "I'd throw it all in the ocean."

I smiled at them and made a big display of enjoying the chowder as the youngsters watched in both anticipation and dread. Placing the bowl down on the table, I looked at them and commented that I was sorry they had to miss such a sumptuous meal.

When they finally determined I was not about to die forthwith, they shrugged their little shoulders and trudged off down the beach. With every few steps they would turn and look back with wonder and awe.

The rest of the summer passed all too quickly. Marie Moore-Jones laughed when I told her the story about her having two husbands. Her husband Jonathan Moore-Jones was from England and she and her son had gone with him for a visit to that country just the year before their death. She was grateful that she had that memory to cherish.

We promised to correspond during the winter months, but as with all good intentions, we never did.

I came back to the little cottage the next summer. As I settled in I noticed the blue cottage boarded up and isolated.

After unpacking my belongings I walked the half mile to the local general store for some provisions. Not many of the summer people had arrived but the few I met told me the tragic story.

My Mrs. Moore-Jones had stayed beyond the usual Labor Day exodus. Early one morning she was found dead near her doorway, her head crushed against a rock as she fell over the ropes tied to the collars of Alex and Max.

The local police had come and taken her beloved pets to the pet shop in the town nearby. The same shop that she had been taking the young kittens to all summer.

The rest of the summer I would find myself glancing out the window, hoping to catch a glimpse of that regal figure, my lonely, neighborly "witch." Then with a feeling of deep sadness, I'd remember she was no longer there.

The Children

By Marlene Wolfe

The swing set sat empty, children, immortal, yelling and dust-smudged, gone,
gone into another age,
another set of playthings.
The wind rode back and forth on the seat of the lonesome swing.
Rust crusted it brown.
The children were busy with telephones and ten-speeds, too busy for backyard games,
too busy shedding a cacoon spun of little person words, spun by a mother who still worried about raspberry knees and infected egos, a mother who stared out the kitchen blinds at the wind-ridden swing.

Gardening guest

Some say if company comes, a refrigerator full of leftovers can't be far behind.

Well, that's probably true. We usually like to put on the dog, figuratively, when folks arrive for a few days of warm visitation rights. We cook the good stuff regularly without holding a 'buffet' of semi-dried leftovers of which there's not enough to feed everyone.

But company brings far more than that to our summers. Just this last week we've had what seemed like a small unorganized family reunion, when different sides of the family appeared in staggered succession.

It was wonderful. I like both having and being company, favoring neither one over the other. And the best part is that anyone who comes to visit me already knows me. My silverware drawer doesn't upset them. And they don't get frustrated as the ice cube tray drops at their feet (empty) when the freezer door opens. They've accepted, or ignored, my swirling household. They know it's not catching and they relax for a good time.

Last Monday it was Bonnie, Bruce and the kids from Maine who made their way to town after being stranded by a non-flight at Logan. That night an old friend and her daughter from Maine came to supper. Hadn't seen each other in years. We agreed we've both improved.

But we'd been waiting in my house for Saturday because that was when my 'sister and her family' were to arrive.

The sheets on the bed were clean from clothesline exposure. Marilyn (her real name) called before 7 a.m. Saturday. They were at Logan and would be there for breakfast. I flashed into the shower, into the kitchen, down to the washer and within a commendable amount of time I was prepared for several days of concentrated laughing and eating.

She has one husband, Dick, and three children, Tapleigh, Robin and Rick. The latter three had grown and looked as good as they had when we left them in California after a January visit out there.

But while I did indeed increase our supply of leftovers during the brief visit, I ended up with a good deal more, a gift of sorts from my sister.

Marilyn's always had this thing about gardening. I do too, in my own way. But our approaches to the good earth have differed as surely as have the results.

My gardening has been based on the premise that the good Lord provides the soil, sun and rain. I put in the seeds at random, and then He does the rest. I have but to bend over a few times during the summer to pluck a loathsome weed of my choice before reaping a bountiful harvest in the fall.

I've had about seven tomatoes, one squash and three cukes this way over a period of years.

Marilyn's developed a relationship with the soil. She leaves virtually nothing to the Almighty in her quest for pretty flowers on that old 'if you want something done, do it yourself' doctrine. And for her beautiful blooms issue from the earth.

Let me say simply, she was aghast at my flower bed. She deemed it to be more of a cemetery than a growing area. So she conceded to instruct me. It was a challenging betterment plan she instituted. As I settled myself comfortably in a lawn chair with my feet up, she donned gloves, gathered equipment and began upgrading my flower bed.

She spoke to me in the tone dear kindergarteners will hear next month, patiently, lovingly, but firmly.

"You must stake your tomato plants. They are crying for help as they lie on the ground."

"Your flowers should be planted in either circles (I was waiting for her to say 'this is a circle') or triangles."

I moved my chair a bit more in the sun for my left shoulder's benefit, as she rustled about putting in an aster here, shifting a coleus there, planting pot and all of the wilted rubber tree thing.

But I learned. My stuff needs to be cultivated a lot. Not to mention watered. I rose in the chair self-righteously to tell her about our water ban and how I'd dare not violate it.

My intermediate lesson was about how many of my plants are perennials and would, with some measure of care, (a doubtful glance at me in my chair) return next year to 'volunteer' in my little garden.

By day's end she was worn through but triumphant. Two areas of soil were artfully arranged with flowers. Her tomato plants were staked. The impatience were safely out of the bright sun. She'd managed to bring the flower cemeteries to life.

It's wonderful to have a big sister. She never gives up on you.

I looked at her flower beds after they'd gone. They're a tribute to her gardening prowess. And I'm just going to sit right there and admire the good works she combined with the good earth.

If nothing 'volunteers' to grow next, she'll want to reincarnate it when she comes back.

All too soon, it's August and summer, as always, is flying by. Living on the coast, we're a natural target for visitors who often forget our existence when winter beaches aren't so alluring. If you're expecting a crowd, this dish can be made well in advance, to be served with a salad and hot garlic bread. Joan Bizzozero's recipe is designed to serve four, so you may want to double the quantities for

CHICKEN CACCIATORA

4 T salad oil
1 3 lb. chicken cut into 8 pieces approx.
2 slices bacon, diced
2 medium onions, chopped
1/2 lb. mushrooms, sliced
1 T chopped parsley
1 tsp. dried basil
Salt and pepper
1/4 c. white wine
1 can [1 lb. size] tomatoes
1 pkg. frozen peas
4 carrots

Heat oil in large skillet. Brown chicken. Remove. Add bacon. Cook about 1 min. over medium heat. Add onions and mushrooms and cook until onions are transparent. Cook sliced carrots separately. Return chicken to skillet. Sprinkle with parsley, basil, salt and pepper. Add wine and tomatoes. Cover. Simmer about 45 min.; add cooked carrots. Cook another 5 mins. Add frozen peas and cook till peas are done. Remove chicken to platter, pouring sauce over chicken and vegetables.

I'm going to have to close my eyes as I write this, for I shudder to think of preparing, much less eating, this recipe of Dick Pearson's. Silly, I know, for to many eel is a delicacy and it certainly is abundant in our waters. I'm also fully aware that Dick is a gourmet cook and many a guest enjoys mouth-watering meals on the deck of their North River summer cottage, but even with all that going for this recipe, I think I'll pass up

EEL ITALIAN STYLE

2½ lb. eel, skinned and cut into chunks
Salt and pepper
Cooking oil
2 T chopped onion
1 tsp. shallots, optional
1/4 lb. mushrooms, cut small
1/3 c. white wine
3/4 c. tomato sauce
Chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon

Season eel with salt and pepper and fry briskly in oil for a short time, enough to stiffen the fish. Remove from pan and in same oil, brown onions. When onions are nearly done, add shallots and mushrooms. Return eel and add wine and tomato sauce. Simmer, covered, 1/2 hour. Serve on shallow platter and sprinkle with herbs.

If you have a few cans of tuna tucked away, it's like money in the bank. On a hot summer weekend, when friends suddenly visit you at the beach, you can invite them to stay for a meal, knowing you have the makings of a tuna noodle casserole, salad or sandwich on your emergency shelf. They'll be back the following weekend if you serve this

QUICK TUNA PIZZA

1 pkg. [15½ oz.] pizza mix
2 cans tuna, drained
1 tsp. lemon juice
8 oz. Mozzarella cheese, shredded

Prepare pizza mix according to package directions, adding small chunks of tuna and lemon juice to the tomato sauce. Before baking, top pizza with onions or cheese as desired. Makes six servings.

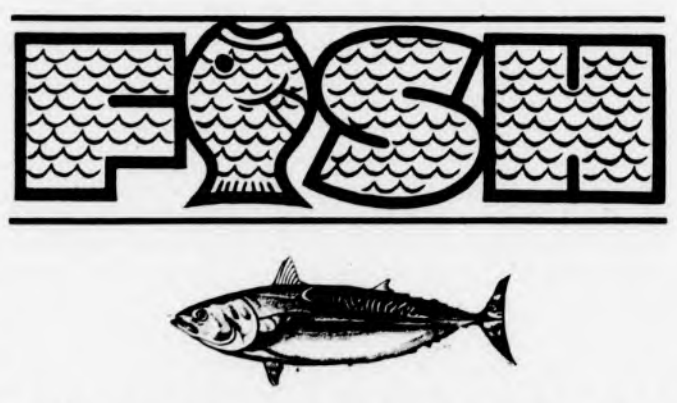
Angler's corner



September will have to be a good month for the bluefin tuna, since August has yielded relatively meager results. A few of the giants are being taken and bringing good prices, but overall the catch is less prolific than last year.

This being August and still the doldrums, fishing is still generally slow in the salt. The hordes of bluefish that roamed the coast last month are elsewhere now, but they'll be back. Striper fishing is still erratic except for those who know what they're doing.

Last week a lucky angler at Powder Point Bridge in Duxbury pulled in an eight-pound bass while fishing for flounder on light gear. The gent didn't have a net and since he was using light tackle, he had to walk half the length of the bridge (about a quarter mile) and land the fish on the beach. He did just that. All this means that schoolies haven't disappeared.

There are some keeper pickerel in Lily Pond in Cohasset but don't go helping yourself without first getting permission from the Cohasset Water Department, the pond being a reservoir. When you do get the green light, use live bait first and spooners second.

Fulling Mill Pond in Hingham is still producing a few largemouth bass and some small largemouths are being taken from the Albert Norris Reservation Pond in Norwell of Route 123. The fishing, if not great, is certainly fair and the place is fine for a picnic as well.

Fly rod anglers should take themselves down to Little Pond in Plymouth for some productive bass fishing. The pond for years was reclaimed for trout but, because of the cost, smallmouth bass were stocked as well to hold down the panfish population. As a result, the pond now yields both smallmouth and largemouth in respectable numbers. The trout are there too, but down deep.

Next to Little Pond is Billington Sea, a fair-to-good warm-water fishing spot that will offer pickerel, bass and perch. This week could be decent for pond fishing in general, thanks to the rain of the weekend. Fish don't feed in storms but will gobble food or whatever a day or two later.

Tip of the week: Natural baits are often the best in fresh water. Try gathering some grasshoppers or crickets, both being easily available in the early morning when the weather is cooler. They will whet the appetite of any fish.

Cohasset Auto Body softball girls in slo pitch finals

Two wins over O'Rourke of Quincy propelled Cohasset Auto Body into the finals of the Women's Slo Pitch Softball League in Braintree last week.

But CAB lost the first game of the best two out of three final series against Roadhouse of Marshfield Monday night by virture of a 6-5 score.

The third and deciding game will be held at Penniman Field at 6 p.m. Wednesday. The field is located off Rte. 3 near Valle's Restaurant.

Donna Herbert of Cohasset feels her team can beat Roadhouse since CAB beat the Marshfieldd team twice in regular season by virtue of 7-6 scores.

Pitcher Irene Angers has been a standout for CAB throughout the playoffs, winning two semi-finals games last week and pitching valiantly against Roadhouse after being involved in a home plate collision Monday night.

Angers hit an inside the park homerun but during collision with the catcher, flipped over. She stayed in the game and pitched and also collected three more singles.

The game was tied 5-5 in the top of the sixth inning when Roadhouse pushed across the winning run.

Last week, CAB overpowered O'Rourke, winning 7-1 and 10-7. O'Rourke finished fourth in the league while CAB captured first place with an overall record of 14-2.

In the 7-1 win, Cathy Coleman, Jane Libbey and Debbie Webber were the hitting stars. Coleman tripled and singled, Webber doubled and singled and Libbey contributed two hits. The team banged out 12 hits and left four players on base, a good pressure hitting percentage. Herbert said the team played excellent defense, allowing O'Rourke one run and 11 hits.

Hale, Libbey and Coleman continued their hot hitting in the 10-7 win. Sue Hale had three singles and two runs batted in, Libbey had a triple and a RBI and Coleman drove in two runs with a triple and two singles. The team collected 13 hits while O'Rourke had 11.

Some of the team players are from Cohasset and Marshfield. They include Maureen Gavaghan, Marguerilte and Debbie Webber and Sue Hale all of Marshfield, Donna Herbert of Cohasset and Cathy Coleman and Julie Moore, former Cohasset residents.

Selectmen go slow on cable committee

The selectmen don't plan to rush in to the appointment of a cable television advisory committee, despite the interest in the topic.

The matter will come up before the board again at the selectmen's meeting Wednesday, Sept. 16, at town hall.

But as far as the board goes interest seems limited.

As Henry Ainslie, chairman of the board of selectmen said last week when the matter was postponed, "I don't think this is a priority item for the town."

The town of Hanover is pushing for a regional system, advocates point out that cable companies are reluctant to invest the large sums necessary for a small number of homes, widely spaced.

Cohasset, surprisingly, has a higher per mile density than many South Shore communities, according to information that has filtered through the cable companies.

So far no company has made an actual application in Cohasset.

Protulis, Don Cahill, Bob Sylvia, Jim Gallagher, Bob DeBona, Kevin O'Brien and Phil Thayer.

The team is sponsored by Strawberry Parfait which is owned by Carmine Carlucci.

Laugelle explained after the game that only one game in the series with Hingham Police had a score farther apart than a one run win.

The first game went to Strawberry Parfait by 12 to 11 in extra innings. The second game went to Hingham, four to three. Hingham won the third game two to one. The fourth went to Cohasset eight to two.

Good luck in the playoffs!

Fore River Bridge traffic

Traffic on the Fore River Bridge on Route 3A between Quincy and Weymouth has been reduced from four lanes to two lanes.

Phase 1 of a major repair project began on the southern half of the bridge with two lanes, one in each direction being maintained on the remaining portion of the bridge.

Parfait boys still on top

The Strawberry Parfait softball team is ahead in the championship series of the South Shore Civic League, two games to one.

The only problem with that team, coached by David Pomarico, is that they are given to cliff-hangers.

Take the game last Sunday, for instance.

They were down six runs against the Marshfield Benchwarmers at the Beechwood Ballpark.

Pomarico blamed the Benchwarmers early lead on a high number of errors.

"They were hitting the ball well," he said after the game, looking pleased with his team.

Pomarico, who is a patrolman in town, is finishing his second season as coach. Last year the team finished topping the league.

This year's team is basically the same as that championship club.

Anyway, they went into the top of the ninth tied 12 to 12. There were two outs when Joe Pomarico, David's brother, went to bat. He hit a double. With a bad throw from the other team, he stretched it out to third base.

Robert Swain was up next. He knocked in the winning run.

The only homer hit in Sunday's game for the Cohasset team was belted out of the park by Danny (Boom Boom) Cahill. He hit his great run in the seventh inning.

Should the men of Strawberry Parfait win their next game against the Benchwarmers, the title series will be finished. The game is at 10 a.m. Saturday in Marshfield.

DeBassio to axe Police Lt. post

Cohasset police have been undergoing a slow but steady reorganization ever since Police Chief John DeBassio came to town last year.

The latest plan of the new chief calls for the elimination of the lieutenant's position on the force.

Lt. Charles Stockbridge announced his plans to retire last spring. No date has been set for his departure from the department as yet.

A sergeant's exam has been scheduled by state civil service for sometime in October. There are reports men are studying hard. The sergeant's position pays $18,300, according to the civil service announcement tacked to the police bulletin board.

Chief DeBassio confirmed there has been some consideration to letting the lieutenant's position go unfilled. He said the decision must be made by the selectmen.

But he doesn't expect there will be any rush to decide. The way civil service works he expects a certified list from the state in March or April.

He would like to see two sergeants appointed from that list. There are two sergeants already in Cohasset. Sgt. Richard Barrow is on midnight to 8 a.m. and Sgt. John Rhodes is on 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Lt. Stockbridge has been the commander from 4 p.m. to midnight.

The new organizational table would put a sergeant on from 4 p.m. to midnight. The fourth sergeant would replace the officer in charge on both the 4 to midnight and midnight to 8 a.m. shifts on their days off. The force is on a four days on, two days off schedule. The relief sergeant would work two days on each of the night shifts.

Chief DeBassio said he does not feel it's really proper to operate with a patrolman in charge, as happens now on the days off of the superior officers.

He said he understands Lt. Stockbridge will be leaving after he clears up some business affairs in

Boosters to the rescue and junior high sports revived

By Patricia Desmond

Junior high school sports program will go on just as it did before Proposition 2½ because of the successful fund-raiser sponsored by the school department and the combined sports' booster clubs.

The athletic budget was cut from last year's $92,000 to $85,000. With inflation the cut amounted to 15 percent, according to Clark Chatterton, athletic director for the school system.

The sell-out of the 1,000 tickets to the Sammy Davis Jr. concert Tuesday night at the South Shore Music Circus brought more than $8,000 to the school system, Chatterton said.

By 10 a.m. Tuesday there were only four tickets left at his home and they were waiting for people who had ordered them to pick them up.

Gate receipts will also be increasing this year, helping the cause further, because tickets will be $2 for adults and $1 for students this year throughout the league. Last year tickets were $1 for adults and 50 cents for students. The receipts amounted to $5,000.

The cuts planned by the school committee during budget sessions eliminated junior high school sports, combined freshmen and junior varsity sports, cut out football films and had students paying for some other items, like hockey sticks.

Chatterton said the people have been super, working on the fund-raiser.

"It's good to get the parents involved in this too," he said. "Sometimes these things are taken for granted."

The success of the fund-raiser keeps football films, school supplied hockey sticks and both boys and girls basketball and track at the junior high level.

The combination of freshmen and junior varsity teams was done at the league level and goes on as scheduled.

At the start of the Tuesday night show, School Supt. Eugene Crowell planned to present a plaque to Ron Rawson of the Music Circus for setting aside such a large block of tickets for the fund-raiser and making it possible to restore the funds with just one event.

Chatterton, who works summers at the Music Circus and has for 20 years, pointed out that most of the fund-raisers run through the Music Circus involve 100 or maybe 200 tickets.

Winners all at Recreation final fling

Everyone was a winner at the Recreation Department's final day cook-out and day-long competition.

A quick poll of the participants gave this year's program the best ever rating.

The morning began strong with games of kickball, frisbee and football scattered about on the Little League Field on North Main Street.

One girl who seemed about eight was talking with her brother.

"The best part of today is that there is no quiet time," she said scarcely above a whisper.

Robie Lawrence was interviewed about his comparison of this year's playground program, run under the budgetary constraints of Proposition 2½, and the one he attended last year.

"This year's a little better," he said without pause.

The playground counselors started serving lunch to the hungry sportspeople who by now were lined up outside a rope. The rope divided them from the food serving and cooking area.

Little group by little group, they walked forward to choose their own hot dog and condiments.

"Emily, what do you want," the cook and counselor asked a four-year-old.

In a minute or two someone discovered it was Eddie's birthday. Eddie Marx was five last Friday. He smiled widely at being discovered. And got an extra helping of attention.

Meanwhile one of the younger children began sobbing as he sat with a few others, hot dogs in hand.

"Don't cry, Herbie, the grass is clean, you can eat it," a young counselor said.

Herbie stopped crying.

"More chips," came a small voice from the group.

Cohasset's week

Bloodmobile Sept. 9

The Cohasset Chapter of the American Red Cross will hold a Bloodmobile Wednesday, Sept. 9.

It will be at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St. from 1:30 to 7:15 p.m. All donors between the ages of 17 and 65 years of age, who weigh at least 110 pounds, are urged to attend.

The following people are contacting their committees: Mrs. Robert Gibbons and Mrs. William Reardon, Jr., reception; Mrs. Charles Humphreys, canteen; Mrs. Bernard Mulcahy, volunteer nurses; Mrs. Grank England, secretaries; and Mrs. Donald Steele, Girl Scouts.

Regular donors who are members of donor groups will be contacted by their chairmen. They are: Cmdr. Fredrick Huntwork, the American Legion; Wayne Robbins, Rotary; Robert Richardson, Masons; Mrs. William McArthur, Jr., St. Anthony's Church; Mrs. Gerrit DeVos, First Parish Church; Mrs. Roger Nast, St. Stephen's Church; Mrs. Carl Tuthill, Second Congregational Church; Ethel Gormley, and Carol Cicciotte, Cohasset Schools; Mary Marconi, Norfolk Conveyor; Ginnie Smith, H&W Industries; and Jane Sullivan, South Shore Home Care Services.

Bellotti against gambling

The state attorney general, Francis Bellotti, finally took a stand on casinos last week.

He came out strongly against legalized casino gambling.

"It would create a whole new class of gamblers," Bellotti said. "Poor people gamble. It would be taxing poor people."

Doyle gets leave

Patrolman Gerald Doyle got his six month leave of absence.

A committee of town officials, as stipulated in the union contract, met last Wednesday with union officials and their attorney in a grievance proceeding.

It was agreed that Doyle could have the leave he sought back in June. Doyle hasn't been working since the beginning of July when the leave would have begun. He left to take a job with the MIT security police.

The catch that the union pressed in the matter of the leave was contract wording that left the determination of reasonable purpose up to the chief. Chief John DeBassio had backed Doyle's request. The selectmen denied it, saying the idea of taking a leave to try a new job was not reasonable.

P&B rates

The new rates for the Plymouth and Brockton Bus Line won't be decided until Sept. 11.

The company wants a 24 percent interim increase and a six percent final hike.

One of the main justifications used by the company in hearings before the state Department of Public Utilities is the need to buy new buses.

Another prominent figure in company books is the amount lost during the strike. Much of the $800,000 in the projected deficit comes from the month of the strike.

Court bill filed

A bill to move Cohasset cases from Quincy District Court to the court in Hingham was filed last week by Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray. Just the week before she had gotten the word from selectmen and the police chief that they wanted the legislation submitted.

Yearbooks are in

Yearbooks for the Class of '81 are finally in.

They may be picked up at the high school attendance office from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The finished product is well done.

Selectmen to meet

The selectmen will meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight (Wednesday, August 26) at town hall.

The meeting is beginning a half hour earlier than usual to allow the board to meet with Harold Litchfield, highway surveyor, on the reconstruction work at Margin Court. Town meeting appropriated money for the work last spring.

Penn Central

Negotiations with the Penn Central Railroad people are just where they were a month ago, according to Arthur Clark, executive secretary for the selectmen.

Clark expects there will be an article in the warrant of the next special town meeting dealing with the proposed town purchase of the abandoned railroad line through town.

The price tag is still undisclosed.

Renting plans stalled

Mary Fairman of Jerusalem Road was ordered to hold off plans to rent an apartment until receiving necessary permits from the building inspector and board of health.

Arthur Clark, executive secretary to the selectmen, explained that since Building Inspector James Litchfield was on vacation last week, he sent the order out through the police department.

The initial complaints came from neighbors, he said. The apartment is legal according to the zoning but various permits are required, Clark explained.

Raccoons abound

There were four dead raccoons found on roadways in town last week.

One of the dead raccoons left six babies, which police helped transport to the Trailside Museum.

The rash of dead raccoons seemed to be a coincidence, according to animal experts.

DeBassio to eliminate lieutenant post ...

the area.

Meanwhile the men seem to be backing the new chief with enthusiasm.

One officer laughed about the new coded police log, saying it seems silly to punch cards in all night. But when questioned more about the department's operation, he said, "I've got to give that guy credit, he's really trying. Everything he does is by the book."

Another man pointed out that the only problems the police union has is with the board of selectmen. He didn't have many complimentary words for that group.

"He's trying to bring this department out of the horse and buggy days," another man said.

Former Chief Randolph Feola didn't care to discuss the police department. He said if he had something to say he wouldn't sit down with a reporter and talk about it.

Meanwhile the police log has lost some of its zip but the resulting statistical information is supposed to make the town a safer place.

Chief DeBassio has instituted what they call a universal police code system. The only other South Shore town using it right now is Scituate.

In the code a 14 means vandals. Some of the items are more vague than others. A 39 under the new system might have been entered in three or four lines before. A 39 is missing property, lost and found. It might have been entered before as Joe Dokes of Black Horse Lane reports finding a ring at Sandy Beach. The ring is a diamond, a pear-shaped, with gold and pearls. Joe is keeping the ring until the owner is located.

Interesting item, but not much of it adds to the police work in town. Unless of course, the ring was stolen earlier.

Locations are broken down into geo codes on numbered sections.

"We try to take some work away, every time we give the men a new task," the chief explained about the switch in emphasis from logging everything that happens to a more statistical way of coding.

"They punch an incident card for everything that happens, time in, time the cruiser arrives, time they clear," the chief said.

"From that we can tell what shifts are busiest, what kind of calls we are getting, the seasonal impact on the town. What kind of calls take the most time, what parts of town are the busiest."

The chief plans to redirect his patrol cars using the information, placing the cars in the busy areas before the calls come in.

Boosters to the rescue ...

The selectmen put together their own surprise commendation for Chatterton, asking the press several weeks ago to keep quiet about their public vote until after the fund-raiser.

The concert, which included such memorable greats as "Candy Man," "New York, New York," "Mr. Bo Jangles," "I've Got to Be Me," and many more including a medley from "Stop the World I Want to Get Off."

Afterwards there was a big party at the Chatterton home, celebrating the wonderful victory over the budget.

Rec. Dept's. final fling ...

More chips were handed out.

"Everything will be eaten today," said a voice of authority. "Absolutely nothing will be thrown out."

One young man was nibbling on a hotdog roll that was clearly empty of the main event.

He explained he didn't get a dog in his roll because he doesn't like hot dogs. He was happy just the same.

Meanwhile Patrick Cox, who is six, was still in the lunch line. Some of the youngsters took longer than others choosing between mustard and ketchup.

Pat said he had a great summer at the playground program.

Suzi Kecskemety, who is older than that, agreed with the assessment of the program.

Everyone had a good time. Specially made ribbons were awarded to good sports, winners of various competitions and losers.

Recylcing continues, but CETA jobs end

The recycling effort at the town dump goes on although the two workers paid through the Comprehensive Employment Training Act, CETA, are through on Friday.

Town health officials say the recycling is important to save space in the landfill. It also generates some money for the town.

Members of the board of health plan to work out a budget for the recycling operation soon. They will need to ask the advisory board for funds for the continued operation.

Health Agent Kevin O'Brien said the recycling will continue anyway.

"It will have to be scaled down," he said.

The runner and the race

By Paul Steven Stone

The cars on Sohier Street speed by, and I wonder how many of the drivers notice the runner. Lean and wiry, his gray hair hidden beneath a baseball cap, he keeps his arms close to his body and his eyes focused on the ever-changing next step. He's on the run, this not-so-old, old man. On the run from stagnation, from boredom, from rooms with silent walls and talkative TV's. And he's carrying much more with him than a lunch packed neatly in a brown paper bag.

The brown paper bag is visible. It seems as much a part of his being as the strained look of determination that carries him down the road. What you can't see as you pass by at 40 miles per hour is the light in the man's eyes. At 40 miles per hour you see only a curious old man running to keep his vigor. You see the baseball cap and the brown paper bag, the grimace and the sweat, the steady stride and the lean body. But not the light.

There's a reason why you can't see the light, why only the outer trappings impress themselves on your consciousness, and that reason has nothing to do with the runner. The loss lies with you and the limits you've placed on your ability to experience the world. At 40 miles per hour you can't see the world, only its shell.

If you drive through a neighborhood you see homes, people, dogs and whatever else presents itself to your eyes. But that's not a neighborhood, merely a montage. Somewhere out there a child is practicing painfully on a piano, a woman is overcooking a batch of cookies, children are splashing each other in a backyard swimming pool. Somewhere out there are the sights, sounds and smells that melt into obscurity when you drive by at 40 miles per hour.

One day a few months ago I walked across our town, from my home near the Harbor to the Town Hall. The route I took was one that I had driven many times before but the experience was totally different. What I had seen as a short and pretty drive became suddenly rich and vibrant. Each house had a distinct personality that previously had eluded me, the vegetation was no longer a pattern of greenish hues, but was textured, moving, alive. It was late in the day so the clatter of kitchen noises sounded the dominant theme, and only the birds, the bugs and myself were outside to notice the breeze or the smell of the freshly cut grass.

It's ironic that the tools we've fashioned to bring us closer to our world somehow end up serving the opposite purpose. We encase ourselves in five thousand dollars worth of machinery and never realize that we've thrown up a screen to block out the abundance of experience that surrounds us. We buy a TV with the hope of bringing the world into our homes and usually we end up using it to escape the world. We equate seeing with experiencing, and like cotton candy it never has the substance to satisfy our hunger.

It's not a question of what we are getting when we fill our world with speed and noise, but of what we are losing. That baseball-capped runner is someone worth slowing down to meet. Better yet, look for him at Angelo's, where he works bagging and carting groceries. He'll be standing behind the cashier waiting to take your packages to the car; waiting to smile at you, to talk about the weather or his dog, to make you forget that you and he are strangers.

His name is John, and like you he has an inner light that will never age or lose its luster. Unlike most of us, however, he hasn't learned to keep it hidden; or if he has, he's learned to suppress the urge. He'll talk to you like an old friend, and there's enough sincerity behind his talking that you'll either close up to protect your privacy or you'll open up and enjoy the experience.

A great man once advised men and women to set their lit candles on candlesticks rather than hide them beneath bushels. Throughout your life you will be passing by strangers like John who have followed that advice, and if you're lucky you won't always be traveling 40 miles per hour

The question of the court

By Patricia Desmond

The tennis court, now built at the end of Gammons Road, at the home of Lowry and Diana Bell, is still the subject of litigation.

Because of that, Building Inspector James Litchfield can't comment.

A superior court has said the Bells have a right to build the court and indeed since the building inspector once issued the couple a permit for the court, he must have thought they could go ahead, long ago.

Why is the town fighting this court?

The neighbors at the time, Peter and Marilyn Mazza, were adamantly opposed to construction of the court. The Mazzas have moved out of their house on Gammons Road. It was rented for the summer and now is on the real estate market, reportedly the asking price is above $400,000. The Mazzas' home is a three bedroom house with a bath and a half. It looks out over Little Harbor from a spot on Rice Island.

Analysis

The public statements of the selectmen seem to indicate a split over what should be done about the matter. Rocco Laugelle decided not to vote on whether the town would continue to appeal the superior court decisions. He pointed out his son-in-law has done landscaping for the Bells.

The other two selectmen met several times in executive session, to try to reach some agreement on the matter.

Their decision was to appeal and to let the Mazzas carry the burden of the main legal offensive.

Busing

About 10 years ago busing became a very bad word around metropolitan Boston.

In the suburbs its popularity has never declined. Busing is as wonderful today, as far as most every parent is concerned, as are free public movies, band concerts, balloon day and other recreation department programs.

Anyway the school system is in the process of altering the long standing busing program. We want more public opinion on the secret plan.

Now Eugene Crowell, School Supt., has been very helpful in explaining why the routes are not yet available for public inspection. There are changes still to be made. Information is being worked on by various officials. It is not final.

Still there is a plan, final or not, which has been gone over with these officials and school committee members. That scrutiny hasn't happened out in the open.

We think there will be a loud hue and cry when parents realize the changes, especially since they will discover those changes only a few days before school opens.

The school committee long ago approved the concept of reduced busing. That was the motivation behind the decision to cut $30,000 from the transportation account.

School officials say the reduction will mean eliminating 30 percent of the school bus stops. That's about 30 stops less than last year.

Whenever the subject comes up, Crowell says the elementary school busing will not be greatly affected. The students being left off the buses will be in junior and senior high school, students who often chose to use bicycles or walk with friends, anyway.

The feeling of people in the community, who've heard one or two details of the plan, seems to be that of apprehension.

It may be the greatest plan in the world. But as long as people are finding out about it through rumor and hearsay, fears will be flamed.

Enough of this secrecy.

Out with the list of bus stops.

Thanks, Clark

Thank you, Clark Chatterton, for all the fine work you did on the sports fund-raiser.

Sammy Davis Jr. may deserve some of the credit for being such a strong drawing card. But people in the school system say you, Clark, were the driving force behind the boosters appeal.

Thanks, Clark ...

The combined boosters clubs did a great job putting the ticket sales for the expensive evening at the Music Circus over the top.

Everyone who plays junior high school sports should have been in the background this Tuesday night to applaud the way the programs were saved.

A sell-out at $20 to $30 a ticket isn't an easy thing to achieve. It just goes to show that Proposition 2½ means the townspeople may want tax reduction but they also want to pay the bill on the important things in life — the future of the town's children is a top priority.

Question ...

The case has been decided by superior court judges a number of times.

The town is contending the Bells should use building setbacks for their tennis court. The Bells believe their setback complies with the zoning bylaw. They contend the applicable setback is the one for structures.

So the appeal process continues.

Charles Humphrey, the Bells' attorney, said the latest appeal by both the town and the Mazzas is at the stage of filing briefs. Both the town and the Mazzas will file, then the Bells respond, then a hearing is set.

While this goes on the Bells have filed a civil rights suit seeking damages because they have been the only people in town stopped from building a tennis court because of setbacks.

Another court was built in town while this legal process moved on. It did not comply with the regulations the town says are applicable to the Bells.

That's the basis for the civil rights suit. A spokesman for the town said the difference was nc one complained about the other court.

Obituary

Mary Hodgkins

Mary Theresa (Neagle) Hodgkins, 78, a lifelong Cohasset resident and a retired secretary of the former Hingham Shipyard and John Hancock Insurance Co., Boston, died Saturday in South Shore Hospital, Weymouth following a lengthy illness.

She had worked at the shipyard during World War II, and later at John Hancock Insurance Company. She was a member of George W. Bean Post American Legion auxiliary.

Wife of the later Chester D. Hodgkins, she leaves a son, Vaughn Hodgkins of Mountain Home, Idaho; a brother Leo Neagle of Quincy; and six grandchildren.

A memorial Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church. Burial was in Woodside Cemetery.

Appeals Board Chairman backed the Bells

Lowry and Diana Bell's petition to the Board of Appeals for a tennis court is as follows:

It is clear that the tennis court is a structure and not a building. Structures which are not buildings are limited only by Section 5.2.8 of the Zoning Bylaw which requires that a structure over 5 feet in height should not be located closer than 15 feet to the street and by Section 5.2.7 which is not relative in this petition. There are no side yard requirements for structures which are not buildings. Also, a wall, a fence or a hedge is permitted in all districts according to the Zoning Bylaw. The natural place for a fence, a wall, or a hedge is along one's property line. Therefore, in my opinion, construction of the proposed tennis court in the location shown on Mr. Bell's plans needs no action from the Board of Appeals and is a matter of right.

Clark Chatterton has received a letter of commendation from Selectmen for the time and energy he has spent on the Sammy Davis Jr. Fund Raiser, which was held Aug. 25, with the proceeds going towards Cohasset Junior High Sports. He did a great job.

Sissy and Larry Cullivan are parents of an eight-pound, fourteen-ounce baby boy born Aug. 19 at the South Shore Hospital. Justin McRae was greeted on his arrival home from the hospital by his three-year-old sister, Jennifer. Charlie Ford, a senior this fall at Cohasset High School, went on an extended tour earlier this summer to Spain, Portugal, Sweden, England, Czechoslovakia, stopping in Canada on the leg back.

The Strawberry Parfait is very close to winning first place in a best out of five playoff with the Marshfield Benchwarmers. They have won two games with Boom Boom Kahil saving the day Sunday with a home run making the score 13-12. Good luck next Saturday, they'll be playing in Marshfield.

The Cohasset Swim Team put on a grand performance last week of Charlie and the Chocolate Factory at the town hall. The audience's approval could be heard clear across the Common. Amy White, who directed the play, has run the swim team for the last three years.

Greg Raffa left recently to attend Catawba College in Salisbury, North Carolina. He'll be playing soccer on the school's team. His parents are Roberta and Robert Raffa.

Whitney Halloran is taking his senior year of college abroad at Sophia University in Tokyo, Japan where he will be studying Japanese economics.

He took extensive Japanese courses while attending the University of Massachusetts, Amherst campus and speaks the language fluently. While attending Sophia he will also teach English. Whitney's parents are John and Linda Halloran.

The Rivalry Race was held last week between the Sailing and Yacht Club instructors. Steve D'Onofrio won the coveted Bilge Cup for the Sailing Club, then everyone had a great time at the party that followed.

Happy Birthday to Dotty Laney.

Here's another request for information. Please feel free to call me with anything printable. Parties, births, birthdays, promotions, college information, etc....THANKS!

Leland Wilson

Cohasset resident Leland Wilson of 94 Forest Ave. is serving as physical arrangements chairman for the 56th General Assembly of the Telephone Pioneers of America.

The event — to be held in Boston this fall — is expected to draw over 1,000 persons from across the country. Wilson is a division manager in the special services department in Quincy at New England Telephone. Pioneers are members of the world's largest voluntary social-industrial organization comprised of over a half million telephone employees with more than 18 years of service in the telephone industry.

Heidi Brown of 67 Ripley Rd. will be attending Brown University beginning in September. She graduated from Phillips Academy, Andover, in June.

This summer, Heidi is working as a waterfront counselor at Patriot's Trail Girl Scout Council camps Favorite and Menotomy.

Murray files anti electronic coin machines bill

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, this week filed a bill to prevent the latest wrinkle in lottery devices, the electronic coin machine.

The bill comes on the heel of criticism of the new concept in state sponsored gambling.

The legislation would outlaw a lottery slot machine, of sorts.

It prohibits coin operated devises for the state lottery commission. Just last week state officials began a public discussion of the possibility for the lottery.

"What's to prevent children from using the coin-operated numbers game?" one anti-gaming advocate said in reaction to the new proposal.

Rep. Murray has been working with the anti-casino people. Her legislation, since it is late-filed, needs 4/5's approval for admission. But she expects smooth going.

Nancy O'Toole, her aide, said anyone favoring the legislation should call their legislators about it. The bill was just filed Monday.

Rep. Murray thinks it will be admitted for debate in September.

McKinnon blasts auto insurance hike

Saying that auto insurance companies cannot be trusted to treat the public fairly, state Sen. Allan McKinnon (D-Norfolk and Plymouth), Chairman of the Legislature's Joint Committee on Insurance, today blasted the industry's latest request for a $225 million or 25 per cent rate increase for 1982.

McKinnon pointed out that the State Supreme Court recently rejected industry claims that rates for 1980 and 1981 were insufficient to allow them a fair profit. "They're making literally billions on their investments and all they do is cry poor-mouth," he stated.

"Every time the companies ask for such exorbitant rate hikes, they only provide further evidence that regulation is needed to protect the public from their greed."

Kenny wowed 'em in the Garden

By Lois Martin

Just imagine, Kenny Rogers and me together for the first time...with only 15,000 other people in Boston Garden to distract from that special moment.

Well, it wasn't quite that breathtaking. I managed not to swoon when he crooned. But on the other hand, he was as good as I knew he'd be.

We'd never been to a bigtime concert before. Our boys have. They've attended the ones that make parents nervous till they get home safely, what with the crush of thousands of teenagers, those hard rock followers and all.

The boys have always come home with a tee shirt honoring the group they've heard in concert. I have no Kenny Rogers tee shirt but I saw plenty of them.

PATCHES

We had good seats, gleaned from friends who couldn't attend. We sat 14 rows from the center stage. The rows were so close they could have skipped the chairs and let me just hold the woman in front of me.

The only other time I've heard a star in Boston Garden was in 1952 when Eddie Fisher appeared there. I like to tell people he and I appeared the same night because I played clarinet that evening with the New England band, under Paul Lavalle. It wasn't that I was any good. Rather, I believed there was room for one more in a car leaving from Ellsworth, Maine. I've never forgotten how those young women screamed and raced toward Eddie when he sang "Oh Mien Papa."

No one did that for Kenny. Instead they reverently delivered roses to the stage. He took them and, without sniffing them appreciatively, handed them over to someone in his entourage.

But before he got on stage, there was swell Susan Anton in a nifty show biz dress, accoutered in feathers. She was everywhere, singing and swirling, her blonde hair wafting attractively. Some men I know were on the edges of their seats. She sang "Angel of the Morning," and "The Rose." She really turned up her wattage for the spirited delivery.

So I forgave her for being one nice-looking woman. Heck, I told myself, the rest of us would look just like that if we'd been graced with long golden hair, sightly legs, and a neat figure instead of the ability to make a mean molasses cookie.

Then there was this warm-up, comedian. I thought he was great. When one can't sing, it's no small challenge to keep the attention of the audience, get it revved up for Susan and Kenny and make them laugh all at once.

Finally, Kenny took over. There he was on the stage, all silver and white in his body and clothing combinations. I'd been demure and well-behaved during Susan's performance.

But when Kenny arrived, I stood with the rest of the throng, and was astounded to hear from my place in the Garden my old cheerleading whistle and my voice calling, "Hey, Kenny!" Shocking to lose control like that.

Lo, in front of the man, the unanimous hero of the evening, was a paunch, undeniable, though overlooked in favor of his music.

On the same stage which had served to bring Susan Anton blisters on her little feet from her joyful prancing, the magnificent Rogers merely strolled.To say he offered low key response to babbling fans would be an understatement. He never yawned, but there was a smidgen of tedium in his dialogue with the thousands of unredoubtable fans.

Still it was his songs that mattered. They were every bit as good as they could have been. The exciting by-product of such a performance is the ultra professionalism behind him in stage lighting and the band. Polished perfection, elevating Roger's voice to its best.

Poor Clark Gable, I thought to myself, adulation for him could not match this for Kenny. There was no cry for youth and energy that night. What was offered and required was maturity in music.

I'm wild about maturity. It looks so good on people. It has a richness that inexperience lacks. And Kenny has maturity.

He did his hits and more. We all sang the chorus of "You picked a fine time to leave me, Lucille." And I knew "Lady" would be in the wrap-up. But I loved the final number, "Ruby," ("don't take your love to town..."). I swear to you I could hear Ruby's heels clicking and you knew she'd had one swell night out, whether she should have or not.

And it was a memorable evening for me, too, a treat to see a bigtimer. If Kenny didn't manage to glorify a paunch, something no American hero has done before, he did make it of no subsequence when you have a voice like that.

Roadside stands have always been my nemesis — they beckon to me to stop, no matter the time of day, or the miles I've yet to go. And now, just when summer's fruits and vegetables are sumptuous and native corn and bouquets of splashy zinnias so alluring, farmer's markets are also dotting the summer scene. Ken Molla urges us all to visit the Hingham market on Station St., open from 10 to 2 p.m. each Saturday and 3 to 7 p.m. Thursdays. Many shoppers are enjoying the convenience and reasonable prices featuring fresh vegetables from nearby farms such as spinach. To the Chinese this vegetable was known as the "herb of Persia" but many of us remember it as Popeye's favorite. Good raw or cooked, it can also be frozen, canned or stir-fried. The remaining broth contains nutrients that can be used in soups and stews. Who could refuse this

FRESH SPINACH-MUSHROOM SALAD

4 c. chilled, torn fresh spinach
2 c. chilled, torn lettuce
1 c. fresh mushrooms, sliced
1 c. Spanish onions, sliced
2 tomatoes, thinly sliced
Dressing

Arrange salad ingredients in bowl. Cover and refrigerate. For dressing: combine 1 c. plain yogurt with 1/3 c. blue cheese and 1/2 tsp. each salt, basil and celery seed. Chill to blend flavors. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Now, as August draws to a close, we feast on our gardens' offerings and revel in the bounty of our local waters. Every day the fishing fleet supplies our quaint little fish markets with tender flounder, succulent steamers and lobsters right off the boat. Ever since 1945, a summer Saturday finds four thousand pounds of lobster leaving the Green Harbor Lobster Pound, bound for clambakes, restaurants and South Shore kitchens. Barbara Scott teaches, but from April to December, running the shop her parents opened in 1945 is a family project. Her husband, Fred, gave up his job long ago and their three children lend a hand. Some customers are second generation and those who favor baked, stuffed lobster often follow Barbara's suggestion for the stuffing consisting of a few fried scallops, cracker crumbs, tamale, melted butter, parmesan and parsley. Another New England dish is Arlene Garside's

CLAM PIE

2 medium potatoes, boiled, sliced thinly
4 slices bacon
1 c. onion, chopped
2 c. minced clams
1/2 c. milk
1/4 c. butter
2 T flour
Sage, salt and pepper to taste

Cook bacon until crispy, saute onions in fat and drain. Drain liquid from clams into a 2-cup measuring cup. Add enough milk to measure approximately 1¾ c. liquid. In skillet used for cooking bacon and onion, make gravy with flour, butter and sage, adding clam-milk liquid to thicken. Line a single 9" pie crust with the potatoes, spooning clam mixture over them. Bake for 25 min. in 450 degree oven.

The great American picnic is usually pictured complete with ants, warm beer, paper plates and a crunchy sprinkling of sand. Picture instead an elegant picnic for two, with white linen, gourmet viands and thin-stemmed wine glasses. It's a romantic idea, unique to Lucia Kaiser and her wicker baskets are actually custom filled for other occasions such as get-well gifts, birthdays and holidays. Gourmet gift baskets are prepared in Lucia's kitchen and contain such delicacies as her

STEAK QUICHE

1 9" pie crust
3 T butter
3 medium onions, finely sliced
2 T flour
1 c. milk
Salt, pepper, grated nutmeg to taste
3 eggs, beaten
1½ c. shredded cheese; cheddar, blue, mozzarella, etc., depending on one's taste
1/4 c. parmesan cheese
1/2 c. raw steak, cut into pieces

Bake pie crust in 400 degree oven for approx. 15 min. Reduce heat to 350 degrees. In saucepan, melt butter, add onions and cook over low heat until onions are soft. Stir in flour and add milk. Stir until thick and boil, simmering for two mins. Take from heat. Add seasonings and beaten eggs. Arrange pieces of steak in bottom of crust. Pack cheese, pressing down firmly over the steak and into pie crust. Pour sauce over cheese and steak. Sprinkle with parmesan. Bake for 30 min. Serve hot or cold.

Over $1,000 was raised through a Diving Team Bake Sale, hot dog and hamburger sale at the South Shore League Championship Finals and the two night performances of "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" at the Town Hall.

Prior to awards, the staff at the Swim Center ran many fun races for children of all ages. Candy and prizes were presented to the winners. The Paul Revere bowl is given annually to the swimmer who in the eyes of the pool staff represents good sportsmanship, consideration of others, friendliness and a willingness to help others.

Fire Facts

Toxic smoke is a major hazard to hotel and motel guests if fire breaks out. Another hazard is uncertainty as to what protective measures you should take.

Plan ahead by asking the management about fire protection devices in the hotel. Familiarize yourself with the location of exits and fire alarms. Know the shortest route to take to escape in case of a fire. Also, have an alternate route in case your escape is blocked by smoke or fire. Never try to use an elevator if fire breaks out. Keep your room key on the night table, ready for use in case of an emergency.

In case of a fire in your room, leave quickly, close the door and sound the nearest alarm. Use the stairs to escape. By following this procedure, you can protect yourself, help prevent the fire from spreading and warn others. Inform the hotel desk as soon as possible.

If you are notified of a fire in the hotel, follow the emergency instructions posted. Take your key with you. Touch the door to see if it is cool. If it is, open the door slightly to check for smoke or flames. If there is smoke in the air, crawl to the nearest stairway. If the stairs are not clear, return to your room, closing the door behind you.

If you can not leave your room close all the doors and keep them closed. Open a window if possible, but only if there is no billowing smoke or flames outside the window. Wave a white or light colored cloth to signal for help. Fill the bathtub with cold water. Stuff wet towels or clothes around the door to keep out smoke and fumes. As an added precaution, a roll of two inch wide masking tape fits easily into a suitcase and can be used to seal off areas between doors and door casings and similar openings.

If heat and smoke enters your room, hold a wet towel to your face and lie on the floor. Don't jump from upper story windows. Don't try to make ropes from sheets or blankets. Let the arriving firefighters help you to safety.

Hopefully, these measures will enable anyone involved in a hotel fire emergency to survive.

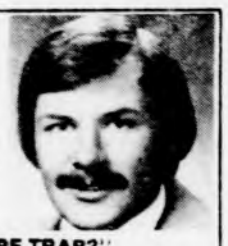
Health & Fitness by John P. Hayes, Jr. D.C.



ARE YOU LIVING IN A "POSTURE TRAP?"

Soft, sagging chairs. Soft, lumpy mattresses. Unadjustable car steering wheels. Low feet-in-front automobile car seats. Rigid school desks. Modern sofas with curved backs or no backs. Everywhere, we are surrounded with furniture and devices that not only do not help our posture, but in some cases do damage to it. And chronic poor posture can lead to fatigue, irritability, muscle strain, and in extreme cases, funcational and organic problems.

Even in your own home you probably have many "posture traps" which you use for relaxation and comfort, but which in reality are detrimental to normal body balance.

Unfortunately, most people confuse softness with comfort, and don't realize that unless a seat or mattress is firm enough and supportive enough to properly hold the spine, the vital muscles and joints can be strained. Sinking into your favorite chair can also crowd your abdomen, compress your chest cavity and ultimately hinder your body from functioning healthfully.

Your mattress should be firm. If you do not have a chiropractic mattress, which has been specifically engineered and designed to give good sleeping posture, it is recommended that you temporarily place a piece of plywood between your present mattress and box springs to keep your bed firm.

Your Chiropractic Physician, who is a specialist in treating health problems related to the structure and nerve functions of your body, reminds you that when you permit your spine to sag, you are allowing muscles to relax and ligaments to be placed under tension as the segments of the spine reach their limit of motion. This in turn can cause health problems.

The solution: Have periodic spinal examinations. And if your dog wants the broken down, sagging easy chair, give it to him. Stay out of "posture traps," and enjoy life to its fullest.

Reminiscence

By Barbara Bielski

I remember running,
agile as two squirrels
among the branches,
to the end of the jetty.
leaping and landing, bare feet
slapping the rocks
'til the blood stained the tops of our toes and we laughed and ran on...

The sea is full of diamonds on a sunny day and steel-gray
when it rains.
From the jetty
in the wind
I see more of myself than I do in the mirror.

Among the slippery, seaweed-covered rocks
we pluck the clams, left behind by the storm,
from the shallow, frigid pools.
Our gloveless hands ache but we can already taste the chowder.

The sea
is steel-gray
when it rains
and in the morning
the salty mist remains.

I can smell it a mile or more away and taste it and feel it, like the spray
off the top of a wave, on my face.

When the dunes were big we'd climb them to the top and jump and roll in the sand, crunching it between our teeth
Laughing, jumping, rolling, laughing...

The sea
is steel-gray
when it rains
and his eyes
foretell an approaching storm.
Walking on the jetty
in the wind
a wave soaks our shoes.
We smile and walk on...

Cat,
Back from your night time walk enter my gate
You with your life three times three Landlord of parasites
Sneak of the world
Fish swim in your eyes
I am the mouse in your dreams the hunted you wear your coat like a red cap
I, creature of fields your mouth is my grave
You pounce on me like the unforgivable sin
I am the offering on the door step the torn apart praise to you a pat, a kiss between the eyes

Register for Fall art classes at Open House

Fall Open House at the South Shore Art Center will be held Sunday, Sept. 13 from 4 to 6 to introduce new teachers and class offerings and reacquaint the public with the on-going classes.

Bill Bell will do a calligraphy demonstration starting at 4. Instructors will be present to discuss their classes, student work from the summer term will be on display and enrollments for Fall can be made. The Center headquarters are at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset.

Young Artists is a new division of classes and is being funded by the South Shore Playhouse Association. It provides a complete offering for ages 7 to 17 especially geared for each age group.

Drawing & Painting for high school age will be offered Monday afternoons with Rosalind Farbush. The Fall term will concentrate on drawing with painting offered in Winter. Multi-media Workshop for Jr. High age is offered Thursday afternoons from 3:30 to 5:30 and taught by Felicia Schoss who recently received her MFA from Boston University. Students will complete projects in a variety of three and two dimensional media.

Portfolio Preparation with Marjorie Vining on Saturdays from 9 to 12 will meet for 10 classes and concentrate on illustrations for portfolios to meet college entrance requirements.

Photo-Images with Time/Life photographer Peter Anderson is for ages 12-14 and will be a two Saturday workshop. Children ages 7 to 11 will have a Childrens Art Workshop with Serena Brundige on Wednesday afternoons, 3:30 to 5:30.

Another new division in the Center offerings is in the Applied Arts planned in a program to extend over the year from September to June. Marjorie Vining will teach Graphic Design Thursday evenings for 16 classes. This will form the basis for students interested in continuing in Illustration with Irena Roman in the Spring term. Ms. Vining's class will concentrate on layout and reproduction skills and use professional assignments as projects. Calligraphy taught by Bill Bell will run for 10 weeks on Monday evenings and will not repeat again until Spring.

Classes offered for college credit through the Mass. College of Art Continuing Education program will again be offered. A new class for credit is Pastel Portraiture taught by Constance Flavel Pratt Tuesday mornings from 10-12:30.

Art Anatomy-Drawing Wednesday evenings for credit will be taught by John Lanza and will be followed in Winter by Figure Painting. Introduction to Painting will be on Thursday evenings with David Tandy and will include two sessions with the clothed model.

Art Appreciation is available in two different classes. Ancients to Moderns is an independent Art History program under the direction of Beverly Rounds Stanley who received her MFA in Art History from Tufts University. Students will be able to choose any area of art history they wish to explore in individual research; Ms. Stanley will meet three times with the group and guide them to resources, bibliographies, visuals and consult with them on their project. The last meeting will be a group presentation.

Tours of Boston Museums and Galleries will be led by Louise Kalish, docent of the Rose Museum, and will take place once a month, September to June on the third Thursday. Current exhibits will be visited and some visits to artists studios may be included.

Drawing and Painting classes for the fall term include:

Drawing on the Right Side of the Brain with Syma, exercises in strengthening the imaginative, creative aspect in drawing; Basic Drawing with Virginia Moore on Monday evenings; Portrait Painting with John Lanza on Tuesday evenings with an emphasis on form and light and shade; Watercolor on Wednesday mornings with Mary Ann Patrick; Experimental Workshop with Joe Burbank Wednesday evenings; Creative Drawing and Painting with Louise Kalish Friday mornings (the last two sessions will be a monoprint workshop).

All classes are for eight weeks unless otherwise noted.

Special Workshops will take place in one-day and one-week formats. Betty Kohlberg will have a Color and Composition Workshop all day Saturday, Sept. 26. Students will work on one project and explore its possibilities from realism to abstraction to non-objective. Class will go from 10-3:30 with a break for lunch.

Virginia Avery will teach a One-Week Intensive Watercolor Workshop from Sept. 28 to Oct. 2 meeting daily from 9:30 to 12:30 and working outdoors, weather permitting. A Stain Painting workshop will be taught by Louise Kalish Nov. 7.

On Oct. 17 Rosalind Farbush will hold a Critique morning for novice and professional alike.

Photography classes have been expanded to offer beginning and intermediate photography in two formats in each eight-week term of classes. Fall term beginning photography will be taught by Paul Fortin Monday evenings and will use a lecture-demonstration approach with darkroom the last two classes. Intermediate Photography will be taught by Linda Wasko and will concentrate on darkroom techniques; students must have had basic darkroom.

Peter Anderson will lead Field Trip one Saturday and a Critique the following Saturday on the work done on the trip. Individual Darkroom is available for photographers who want to work on their own projects; time can be arranged in two-hour sessions and chemicals are provided.

Classes begin the week of Sept. 21 and enrollment must be made in advance. For a complete class schedule, telephone 383-9548.

Membership drive at the Art Center

"You and the South Shore Art Center!" is the theme of the fall membership drive for the South Shore Art Center located at 103 Ripley Road, serving communities from Quincy to the Cape.

New members are welcome to join and it is now time for current members to renew. The Art Center is an educational, non-profit organization that provides day and evening classes for children and adults.

It has changing monthly gallery exhibits that introduce new artists and display the work of familiar favorites, special trips and tours to important museums and exhibits, and "Sunday at the Center" programs that feature films, speakers, demonstrations and seminars.

Although all programs are open to the public, members enjoy the special privilege of being the support for cultural events, receive advance notification of activities, discounts on art supplies, framing and classes.

The Center is a member of the Metropolitan Cultural Alliance, affiliated with the Massachusetts College of Art Continuing Education Program for college credit classes and a participant in Culture Connection with the New England Educational Collaborative.

Matching donations to the Center are made by 16 corporations if the member is in their employ, through the Matching Membership program sponsored by the Cultural Alliance.

These corporations are: Bird & Son, The Boston Company, The Boston Globe, Boston Herald American, Boston Safe Deposit & Trust, Charlestown Savings Bank, Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, Digital Equipment, Fiduciary Trust Co., Index Systems, Ingalls, Instron Corp., Laventhol & Horwath, Polaroid Corp., Shawmut Bank of Boston and Wm. School lunch costs going up, may hit 90 cents

By Patricia Desmond

The price of a school lunch is going up.

That's due to the federal government's pullout of the subsidy system for lunches.

School officials were tied up in meetings on the lunch program this week as they tried to sort out an action plan to cope with the increases.

Just last spring the school lunch went up to 50 cents when the school committee decided to run it on a self-funding basis.

This year expectations were that inflation would push the cost to 65 cents or so. Now the liklihood is that an unsubsidized school lunch will cost 90 cents.

School committee members were scheduled to begin coping with the problem at their meeting Tuesday night, after press time.

One committee member said there's a possibility the lunch program will be catered this vear, with all the cafeteria employees being laid off.

Another possibility is that the schools will sell lunches based on the real cost — that would be in the neighborhood of 90 cents.

School Supt. Eugene Crowell pointed out there is another option available to the school committee — that is a moderate increase in the price of school lunches accompanied by some subsidy from the school system.

He said he doesn't favor the catered lunch approach because the school system has a large investment in its kitchens and "There are some wonderful ladies working in the program who have been part of the school system for years."

His own view is that the combination of a price increase and small subsidy is the most logical.

"But the school committee will make that decision," Crowell said.

The problem is not unique to Cohasset. The federal lunch program was cut by $1.5 billion nationwide, that's a third of the program budget.

He has had his staff members out at meetings with officials from other school systems this week to gather data on what nearby towns plan to do with the problem.

"We may even find new revenues from within the program by starting an after school snack program. There are probably 1,000 kiddos that are involved in after school sports. We could sell pizza, hamburgers and hot dogs for them to put some money back in the basic hot lunch program."

The menu for next week with school beginning Tuesday is printed elsewhere in the Mariner.

At least two parents said they hope the quality of the lunches go up along with the price.

"My kids won't eat what they've been serving," one mother complained. "But even if they would I'd never pay $1 a day for it. What's two slices of bread and some baloney cost? It's not worth $1."

The school lunch program has a budget of $35,000 for the year. In the budget the money was to come for the most part from the fees gathered from the children.

The federal government was slated to supply $11,000.

Volunteers keep recycling going

Volunteers are keeping the recycling effort at the town dump moving along in the absence of paid help.

And more free help is being sought out by members of the recycling committee, the board of health and town disposal committee.

The operation at the Cedar Street landfill needs state approval for any expansion. That expansion seems imminent, looking at the grade on the trash pile.

The two summer workers finished their term a week ago. They had been paid by the Comprehensive Employment Training Act to run the recycling center for the town. Dr. Charles Bliss, chairman of the board of health, said the recycling operation which takes glass, aluminum and paper is continuing because of the volunteers found by the recycling committee.

He said his board is working out the figures needed to ask for a transfer to hire a parttime worker to keep the recycling effort.

Meanwhile the town disposal committee has reorganized with Ernest Stevens as chairman. The committee has divided up areas of responsibility and plans to meet on the first and third Tuesdays at town hall.

Eleanor Cooney, one of the town disposal study committee members, said she believes a serious recycling effort could prolong the life of the landfill by more than a year's time.

Estimates are now that the landfill will last three to five years.

Mrs. Cooney toured the Wellesley dump this week to learn more about their recycling operation.

In Wellesley about 20 percent of the town's trash is recycled.

Two buildings on the old dump site are used for the recycling effort. One was an incinerator. Now the town trucks its trash to the regional landfill in Plainville, some 30 miles away. The Plainville dump is 50 miles from Cohasset.

She described the Wellesley operation as finding

Selectmen in no hurry for cable

Cable television is not coming to town, according to the words of Henry Ainslie, chairman of the board of selectmen.

He can't see what benefit the town would receive from getting into cable and so he said last week during the regular meeting of the selectmen.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle, who went to a meeting on a regional cable system in Hingham about a month ago, didn't contradict the chairman.

Meanwhile the other method of pay television sells its service by satellite. The movie channel, known as Starcase just changed its name to Star along with a change in ownership.

Star has an installation fee of $45 and charges $22.95 a month. Promotional plans offer three months of free service. A spokeswoman for the company said there are subscribers in Cohasset.

Star offers "adult films every night, and will show the Sugar Ray Leonard vs. Tommy Hit Man Hearns for an extra fee.

"We feel subscription television has a real future in this market. We're nowhere near saturation," said Jeffrey Brodlieb, general manager of the Needham operation.

"People are going to want a complete movie channel, even with cable, and we're going to be it."

While Star is available in town, it needs no official approval.

A cable television company could only come to town with a license and that requires approval of the selectmen.

Victor Colantonia of Bay Cable Affiliates, the company which holds the license from Weymouth, wrote to selectmen last week asking permission to address the board or the cable study committee. Earlier the board had put off a decision on

The Parfait boys were perfect

The Strawberry Parfait softball team decimated the Marshfield Benchwarmers 17 to 5 last Saturday, bringing the trophy for the South Shore Civic League back to Cohasset for the second year in a row.

The game, the fourth in the playoffs for the championship, brought the series score to three games to one.

It was the first game in the series where the Parfait team creamed the opposition. Most of the games had been close — good games. Six out the past nine games were won by one run.

David Pomarico, the coach, sat at the police station after the wildly jubilant celebration, talking about the results.

There weren't any homeruns slugged out in that game at Gov. Winslow School in Marshfield.

"The whole team was hitting well," Pomarico said. "There were a lot of base hits. Everyone had a little piece of it."

The game started out slow. The first hit for the team Carmine Carlucci sponsors didn't come until the second or third inning, the coach said, looking proud.

Then in the fourth inning there were seven runs.

"After we hit one or two of them, the Benchwarmers just seemed to give up. They weren't psyched for it," the coach said.

Who was responsible for the win?

Pomarico levelled the credit squarely on the shoulders of the whole team.

He pointed out that the sponsor who owns Strawberry Parfait is a "super guy."

He said that in the 18 years he's been playing softball, he's only known one other sponsor who's been so willing to back the team.

Carlucci brought a couple cases of champagne to the game, apparently knowing the win would come.

Afterwards there was quite a bit of the bubbly stuff distributed among spectators, poured over heads and uniforms, and otherwise used up.

Cohasset's week

Clark is ticket clerk

Arthur Clark is the new parking ticket clerk.

It's a job that should keep him quite busy, given the police department's ongoing crackdown on parking violations.

Under a recent state law, communities must appoint a parking clerk and ask to take over the old tickets held by the district court by Sept. 1. The appointment of Clark, last week by selectmen, staves off a possible problem.

Clark, who volunteered for the job, will receive no additional compensation.

If Clark, or someone else employed by the town, hadn't been appointed to take over the outstanding tickets, the district court would have held onto the job but received no compensation for handling the work. Municipal officials elsewhere have indicated concern over how much of the work would be done.

The new procedure, giving communities all the revenue from moving and parking violations, went through under an outside section of the recently passed state budget.

The section needs to be accepted by town meeting.

The new police push against parking violators has nothing to do with the new regulation on the revenue. Police Chief John DeBassio said early in the summer when word went out that parking violators would be heavily fined that he was acting to enforce the will of town meeting and the residents.

Name change

After hearing the objections of the planning board, the selectmen rescinded an earlier decision to name Richard Farwell's driveway Twin Oaks Way.

They had hedged the earlier decision with a statement on it being contingent on being not a duplication.

Farwell owns land on Beechwood Street. Planning board members feels he may gain some rights toward future subdivision of the six acre tract if the name were officially adopted.

P&B fares up again

Commuters on the Plymouth and Brockton bus line are paying more once again, but this time with promises to better buses.

A volunteer task force has been formed to look into rider complaints. Rep. Philip Johnston, D-Marshfield, tried valiantly to halt the increase. He at least wants improved service.

Company officials claim that ridership is down 12 to 15 percent since the stike.

But Tanna Kasperowicz and a few others we know about have joined the number of commuters from Cohasset to Boston on a daily basis.

The state Department of Public Utilities approved a fare hike of 11 percent as a temporary measure. The company had asked for a 24 percent temporary hike.

Another request, for a 30 percent permanent increase, is under review. A decision on that isn't expected until sometime this winter.

Tanna's own view of the bus line is that the ride is cheaper than a commute by car and more convenient than the schedule of the commuter boat.

Road reconstruction

Two feet of the grade of Margin Court will be cut away by road reconstruction.

Harold Litchfield, highway surveyor, told selectmen last week he is about ready to seek estimates on the job, approved last spring by town meeting.

Heating system contract

The contract for sheet metal work on the heating system for town hall was awarded last week to Scituate Sheet Metal for $2,475. The company was the low bidder.

Sportsmen's Club eviction

The selectmen didn't suggest compromise, but John Kirby, assistant town counsel, will be meeting with the attorney for the Sportsmen's Club, David Sweeney Jr., at his request.

The selectmen voted to evict the clubhouse from town land after several years of discussion over the matter.

The Sportsmen's Club is relatively inactive.

Joel Rosano has been living in the clubhouse for sometime. The town taxes the small red building off Route 3A opposite the Winter Gardens. There is no tax payment on the land since it is still town owned.

The building was moved there nearly 20 years ago after a town meeting authorized the selectmen to lease the land to the club. Neither the club nor the town seems to have a copy of the lease.

Town officials say things were done loosely back then, they doubt if a lease ever existed.

Galt reappointed

The troika says it inadvertently omitted the name of Grant Galt from the list of appointments announced last week.

Galt is reappointed to the advisory committee.

Sohier St. block party

Plans for a neighborhood block party on Sohier Street on the afternoon of Saturday, Sept. 12, are under consideration by the selectmen.

Stephen Bartow asked that the section from Ripley Road to Green Street be closed off on that day for a neighborhood picnic. Selectmen want to find out whether the residents realize they can't have liquor on town property before further thought goes into the matter.

But the fact that the South Shore Music Circus will still be in operation makes it less likely the request will be granted. Selectmen had their secretary check the dates of the Music Circus by telephone as their meeting progressed.

Henry Ainslie, chairman of the board, pointed out that a precedent would be set by the decision and that usually block parties are on deadend roads. Sohier Street is a through way.

Spending extra aid

The extra state aid will go to pay unexpected costs, that is unless the advisory board has a change in its sense of direction.

The $140,000 could be used to offset taxes or to restore services cut by Proposition 2½, with approval of special town meeting.

But there are high and unexpected expenses this year like a bill for $5,300 from the law firm that handled the town's suit against Lowry and Diana Bell over their new tennis court.

Other unpaid bills amount to roughly $5,000.

The budget for Blue Cross is $15,000 less than needed. Street lighting will be short. And $75,000 is needed to cap the town landfill to meet state requirements. Unless they are met the dump will be closed.

Little Harbor Bridge

The state Department of Public Works rated the bridge at Little Harbor over Atlantic Avenue as capable of carrying the maximum load under law.

Caught in union fight

Police department doesn't dispatch

The clerk dispatcher in the police department, Yvette Rattenbury, still goes to work every day. But she can't do the dispatching or payroll or beach stickers or any of the other tasks she took over from the uniformed men these days.

She's bidding her time waiting for the state ordered negotiations over her job to be completed.

The union met with the town for the first time this week to discuss the negotiations. Until now all the discussions were over whether there would be negotiations.

Men in the union, for the most part, don't seem to object to Mrs. Rattenbury's previous performance. The men who work with her aren't hostile or difficult, Mrs. Rattenbury explained this week.

"It's the principal with them," she said.

"My only worry is about my job. I gave up a higher paying job to take this. Now that job is gone forever to me. I'm concerned about keeping my job."

Mrs. Rattenbury, who lives in Cohasset, decided to take the clerk's job because it was closer to home.

Her position replaces one patrolman but no one was laid off.

Police Chief John DeBassio faced with the need to keep his budget down chose not to fill a vacancy in the ranks of patrolmen but to hire a civilian dispatcher at less cost to the town.

The union forced the town to negotiate after complaining to the state Labor Relations Commission.

ways to reuse many more items than Cohasset has been recycling.

"They bale paper and sort the three colors of glass and even have a way of recycling plastic bottles," she said.

Books are stacked on shelves by a sign saying take and leave. Other small reusable items are kept in similar fashion.

"There's even a Salvation Army box for clothes," she said.

Other items recycled include three trimmings and wood for kindling, leaves and sand.

Metal cans are mixed but clean. The operation separates steel cans from aluminum ones, something people find difficult on their own. A magnet is used for the separation process.

Meanwhile the town's own recycling operation will become better in the next few months, thanks to the efforts of a young Boy Scout, Robert Harrington of Beechwood Street.

He is planning an elevated walkway to the recycling bins for the workers to use. Bliss said the walkway will make the operation safer.

Selectmen last week granted approval of the project, which will earn the young man an Eagle Scout award.

He expects it will take three months to construct the walkway. Materials will be paid for through private contributions.

Selectmen in no hurry for cable ...

appointment of a study committee, something advocated by Peter Pratt.

Selectmen, which at last week's meeting included Ainslie and Laugelle, decided to send a letter back to the cable company saying they don't have any real need to hear what Colantonia has to say.

"But we'll keep them in mind," Ainslie added.

Pratt's prediction is that the town will be forced to begin the cable process whether it cares to or not. Under state regulations at least part of the process must begin whenever a company submits an application to the town. Hingham just received an application from the company that holds the Marshfield license.

From all the cable company's activity in the region, it seems many nearby towns will get into cable systems in the forseeable future.

Plymouth was the first town on the South Shore to issue a cable license, about a year ago. Some sections of the town are beginning to receive cable service.

School lunch costs going up ...

A school committee member suggested it would be questionable policy to subsidize a program not knowing how many lunches would be sold anyway — because no matter what, the cost of a school lunch will go up.

The question is how much and when.

Another question is whether the change in operation will alter the basic lunch program. The lunch program at the junior/senior high school offers choices as it is currently set up. There's a salad bar every day and a sandwich offered as an alternative to the basic hot lunch.

The breakfast program is offered at the high school only.

Estimates are that the increased cost of the program will make it too expensive to be attractive. The breakfast programs sells simple meals like an English muffin, fruit juice and milk most days.

But students who have eaten the breakfast say the food is fairly good.

School lunches

It looks like the price of a school lunch will be going up.

And well it should.

A school lunch program is a wonderful thing as any mother who escapes making peanut butter, jelly and marshmallow sandwiches can attest.

But as wonderful as it is to leave out a few pieces of change inside of creating something nutritious and tasty for a brown bag, it isn't something the school system should be subsidizing.

As long as the federal and state governments were putting up funds for the program, the cost remained ridiculously low. It's a shame those subsidies have been demolished. If we thought there was one chance in a million President Ronald Reagan would read the Mariner and heed our wisdom we'd write him an entire editorial all his own on the government's duty to encourage proper nutrition in a generation that will someday lead the country.

But until the chances are a million to one, we'll concentrate on letting the school committee know how we are thinking.

There's more to education than apples and pizza strips. There are other programs that budget reductions may alter with more long lasting destruction. If people can afford to pay the $1, more or less, it costs for a school lunch, they should. And of course, if they can't afford it, they should have the lunch provided without complication or embarrassment.

When the school committee voted last year to operate the school lunch program on a self-funding basis, they were being wise and just.

It seems silly to give a lunch subsidy to children who come from a family with an income in the $30,000 range. There may be many things that family can't afford, but lunch certainly isn't one of them.

Let them pay for what they eat! Perhaps when we as a community begin footing the full bill for school lunches, there will be more emphasis on selling only the foods the children will eat.

Too much of the federally-subsidized lunch ended in the local landfill anyway.

It's time to revamp the whole lunch program to fit into a different economy — one without the federal strings.

Great season. Great win last Saturday. We hear the Marshfield Benchwarmers are still wondering whether there was a sneak hitter from the major leagues slipping into the line-up.

Lottery slot machines wrong play

Commentary

By Bucky Yardume

No wonder people get confused! And fed up!

Norwell, along with neighbors Hingham and Cohasset want to preserve what they can of their communities. So they oppose Hull's aspirations for casino gambling and status as uncontested Crime City of the South Shore with inevitable ricochet effects.

No sooner did State Attorney General Francis Bellotti come out against casinos citing certain increases in crime than Hull proponents instantly castigated him for daring to have an opinion before consulting them! What's to consult, least of all them?

Bellotti only was saying what others, including those in a position to know first-hand in Atlantic City, have been saying all along. Of course, proponents neatly sidestep such adverse reports or at best shrug them off with unbelievable nonchalance.

But they're instantly enthralled, just as opponents are appalled, when before Bellotti's indictment echoes even faded, state lottery czars announced they will put video slot machines into public places. Including locations where they can't possibly be controlled effectively against minors playing them.

Appalling is what the move is; another chintzy move to make a buck regardless of means or consequences.

As for the glee of casino proponents in greeting the slot machines as ammunition for their cause, they're right about the hypocrisy of those who exploit and expand so-called legitimate gambling.

But their arguments are spurious because they're based on the fallacious formula: two (or more) wrongs make a right.

A new friend on the other side

Letters

To the Editor:

One of the personal advantages in my effort to keep casinos out of Massachusetts, is the many people I have met.

For several weeks, your newspapers have been most generous in printing letters from Mr. Jack Silverstein (a summer resident of Hull), with responses from the writer.

I visited Atlantic City last week, and upon my return to Cohasset, I found a lovely long stem rose and note from Mr. Silverstein. Last night, I had the pleasure of meeting this gentleman (and his lovely wife), and for several hours enjoyed the pleasure of their hospitality.

Mr. S. and I will probably never agree on casinos as an "industry" for Hull, but I do respect this man for what he believes.

Thank you, Mr. Silverstein, for becoming my friend.

Thank you, Mr. Cutler, for making this friendship possible.

Sincerely,
Mrs. Maria A. Plante

DeBassio presents a traffic plan

Henry Ainslie, Chairman
Board of Selectmen
Town Hall
Cohasset, Massachusetts

Dear Sir:

In reviewing the Town's parking regulations and traffic patterns it has become apparent that a number of delays and obstacles now exist which hinder the efficient flow of vehicle traffic in the downtown area. Parking conditions on Brook Street and Elm Street tend to complicate and frequently obstruct passage because of the nature of the two-way traffic pattern. The delays serve not only as a source of irritation to motorists, but represent a serious safety hazard to pedestrians and motorists alike.

Under normal circumstances the Police Department would be obliged to correct the situation by implementing a strict enforcement program, but in this case, there seems to be a direct cause and effect relationship with the area's design and engineering. Since the width of the streets preclude efficient and safe two-way traffic flow and parking availability is a major concern to local business owners, the alternative would appear to be a one-way traffic pattern which will open the streets to free flowing traffic and possibly even improve parking conditions.

It is my understanding that similar proposals have been considered in the past, and that they addressed the issue by recommending a flow of one-way traffic in a clockwise pattern to include Main, Elm and Brook Streets. The disadvantages of such a proposal would be to effectively reduce fire department response because of limited turning ratio on some larger fire department vehicles. The current proposal is, however, based on a counter-clockwise pattern of traffic and as such, would not represent such a hazard or cause such delay.

Parking would continue on the west side of Main Street between Depot Court and the intersection of Elm and Main Street at a somewhat elongated angle to reduce the probability of obstruction caused by larger vehicles overhanging or obstructing the traveled way; parking would continue on the east side of Main Street from Elm Street to Brook Street heading south instead of north. Parallel parking might also be permitted and increased on Elm Street and Brook Street, keeping in mind only, the necessity to restrict parking at the corner of that intersection to facilitate turns by larger or oversize vehicles.

I believe the plan worthy of consideration and offer it for your attention. In my opinion it will reduce a number of existing safety hazards, speed the flow of traffic and create/enhance parking convenience which will stimulate rather than hinder shopping.

The proposal also reduces the necessity of implementing parking enforcement programs which offend residents and tax manpower resources of the Police Department. The cost of implementation would be limited to purchase and posting of "One-Way" signs and some repainting of pavement parking zones.

Should it become necessary or appropriate in the course of your deliberations to conduct public hearings into the feasibility and/or public acceptance of the proposal, I would be glad to submit cost estimates for your consideration.

Respectfully,
John DeBassio, Chief
Cohasset Police Department

Residents protest roaming dogs

To the Selectmen
Town of Cohasset
Dear Sirs:

Following the suggestion of Cohasset Dog Officer Richard Yocum we, the undersigned, wish to file the following complaint with the Selectmen of the Town of Cohasset.

1. Two Yellow Labrador Retrievers owned by Dr. and Mrs. M. Jancsics, residents of 22 Little Harbor Road since the Summer 1980, create disturbance on our respective properties by reason of trespassing.

2. The dogs roam the neighborhood unsupervised, causing property damage.

3. The dogs create a nuisance by reason of continually leaving their excrements on our properties. They obliterate gardens, lawns and walkways.

4. The said dogs create a nuisance by reason of excessive barking, often late at night or at dawn. The dogs venture on our respective properties and bark on close proximity at the owners or visitors, thus becoming a source of worry and annoyance.

A number of the undersigned are elderly and sick.

Some of us have approached Dr. and Mrs. Jancsics several times requesting that they contain their dogs on their own property, but they have not been cooperative.

We, the undersigned, request herewith that the Selectmen of the Town of Cohasset take appropriate action in this matter according to the laws at their disposal applicable to the keeping of dogs in the County of Norfolk and in the Town of Cohasset.

We, the undersigned, seek herewith to have the privacy of our respective properties protected as entitled by law.

Thank you,
Dr. Nicholas Newman

Observations

Some questions

There was a story in The Quincy Ledger last week about casino gaming. It said Hull was too nice to house a house of cards and other gambling devices, quoting Atlantic City casino executive.

"Hull didn't look as rundown as I'd been led to believe," the man said to that daily paper, which happens to be owned by a Cohasset family.

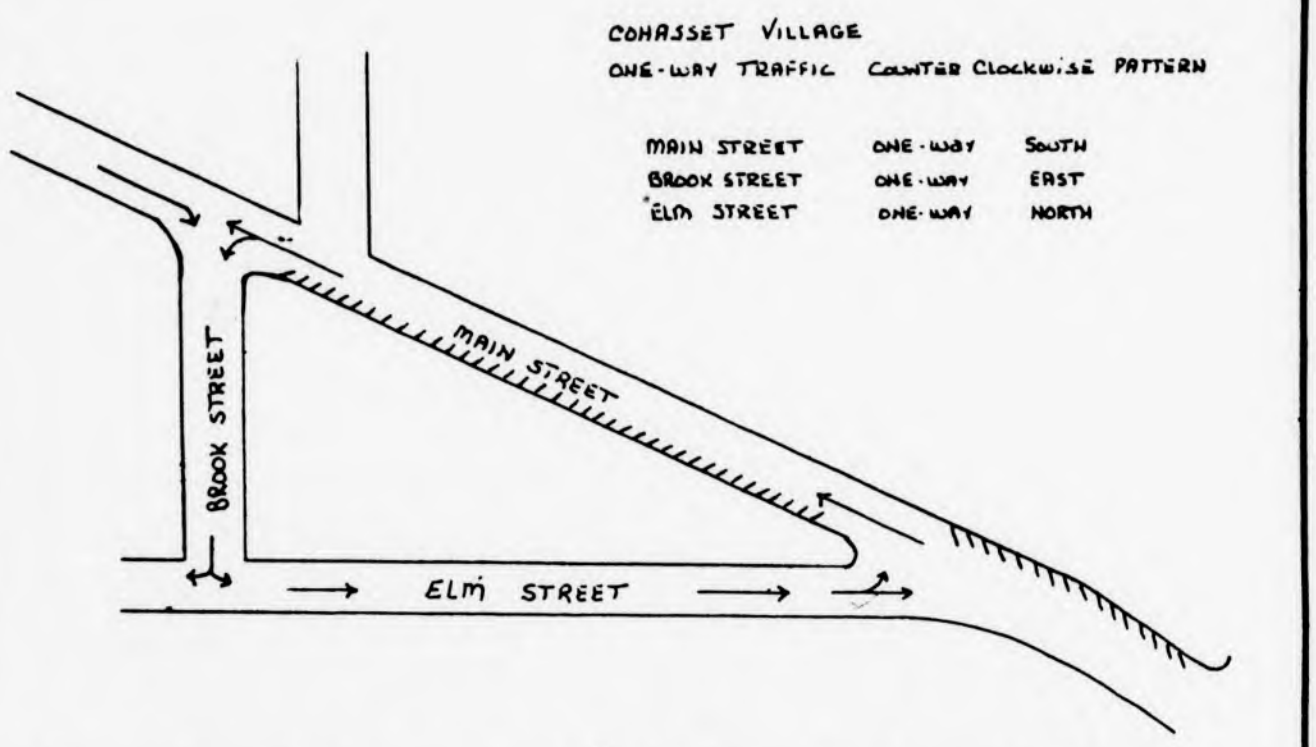
What the man, whose name is Richard Knight, never did explain is why he works for a casino company if he feels it can only be built on total blight.

Our attempts to reach him were unsuccessful, but if he had been available here are some questions he might have been able to answer:

—Why is his company, Bally Manufacturing, trying to foist coin-operated machines on the state lottery commission?

—Why his company is part of the gaming industry in New Jersey which many law enforcement people say has caused the crime rate there to increase so drastically?

—Why if casinos thrive in the midst of a deteriorating community the operators don't chose someplace like Brockton?



So what do you think about Brook St.?

What do you think about making South Main Street one-way from Elm to Brook?

"Where's Brook?" a Cohasset resident of six years asked in reply. "But I don't want to be quoted," he added before getting an answer.

It's an idea proposed by Police Chief John DeBassio as a solution to the traffic snarls and parking plagues in the Village.

Selectman Henry Ainslie said it's not a new idea. But he and the rest of the board want to hear from the Village and Harbor Association, interested residents and the fire department.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said he thinks the strip may have to go the other way, if implemented, to allow fire engines to manuever along the corners.

In DeBassio's plan traffic heads toward Scituate along South Main from Elm to Brook. The one way continues in a triangle to touch all three of the roadways.

Brook Street which runs from South Main to Elm would be one-way under the plan and Elm from Brook to South Main would also be one-way.

The Mariner tried another opinion, armed with the illustration.

"I think it should go the other way," that business person said. Most of my customers come down along South Main. I don't want to see the situation on South Main getting any more complicated than it is."

The one out of three in favor of the plan said she has always known business in the Village needed some help from the town. She suggested if the one-way plan doesn't work, South Main could be closed from Elm to Brook and turned into a mall with brick paving, like downtown Boston. The town parking lot would be turned into a thoroughfare under that unprofessional plan.

"No, I don't want to give my name," the last person approached said. "You never can know how these things can be used against you."

Fire Facts

Cigarettes and other smoking materials are among the most common causes of fires. According to the National Fire Protection Association, "Almost 40 percent of home fire deaths are caused by careless smokers." Since anyone could become the victim of a careless smoker, everyone should recognize and watch out for fire dangers associated with smoking.

Everyone knows that smoking in bed is dangerous, but each year hundreds of people die in fires after falling asleep with lighted cigarettes in their hands. The best advice to give about smoking in bed is: DON'T!

Cigarettes and other smoking materials should be discarded in ashtrays. The ashtrays should be emptied into a covered metal container before retiring for the night.

Look for any smouldering smoking materials in chairs and couches. Hot ashes in between the cushion and the side of upholstered furniture can smoulder for hours before suddenly bursting into flames in the middle of the night.

Also, keep matches, lighters, and smoking materials away from children. A child's curiosity about matches can lead to serious burns or death.

Unfortunately, careless smokers endanger the lives of other people as well as their own lives. Remember to keep the things that start fire away from the things that burn.

Murray joins out-of-state legislators to block casinos

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) says that an interstate group of legislators has been formed to prohibit new casinos in New England, New York and Pennsylvania. The L.A.N.C.E. members have vowed to fight to keep casinos out of our states.

In order to prevent the casino industry from locating in their areas the legislators have formed an alliance to be known as "Legislators Against New Casino Establishments." Mary Jeanette, the leading Massachusetts Legislator against gambling said, "the group will monitor what they term the cancer of legalized casino gambling" and will coordinate strategies in opposing the casino gambling industry in the region." Their purpose will be to "contain the cancer where it lies and keep it from spreading."

Joining with Rep. Murray of Massachusetts and Senator Steven Casey, Chairman of Connecticut's Public Safety Committee will be Senator Jerard P. Conely of Maine, Speaker of the House John Tucker of New Hampshire, Senator Frank Padovan, Assemblyman William F. Passannante of New York, Senator Frank J. O'Connell of Pennsylvania, Representative Jeffrey J. Teitz of Rhode Island and Representative Theresa Feeley of Vermont.

Mary Jeanette went on to say, "Casino interests, as other special interest groups, as in the past, are parlaying the states against each other. Proponents have consistently stated that Massachusetts should have casino gambling now because New Hampshire will have it and we will lose out on revenues. This reasoning is used in every state as a scare tactic. Our coalition will disprove this theory because we will be in close contact and cooperation with each other. Each of us will be aware of what is happening in our states and will be forewarned of any push to pit one state against another state," said the 3rd Plymouth State Representative.

"New York Assemblyman Passannante works closely with the "No Dice" anti casino group in New York as I have been with CACG, (Citizens Against Casino Gambling) the Massachusetts Anti-Casino Committee. Senator O'Connell of Pennsylvania is extremely concerned because the casino industry has targeted the Pokonos resort area. Rep. Jeffrey J. Teitz of Newport, R.I. worked very hard to successfully keep casinos out of Rhode Island, and Governor Ashew's efforts defeated casinos in Florida despite the fact the industry spent millions in that state.

"It is my understanding that the casino industry plans to spend many millions to bring the facilities into Massachusetts."

Rep. Murray said, "At this time I would like to extend an invitation to any legislator or state official to join me in combating this insidious type of gambling in Massachusetts."

"I also urge that all citizens of the Commonwealth who are willing to work to keep casino gambling out of this state to please contact me at the State House.

"I appreciate the past efforts of all the media and hope that they will support my fight against casino gambling in the Commonwealth."

Maria Plante reports from Atlantic City

Maria Plante, Cohasset Coordinator for Citizens Against Casino Gambling, Inc., recently returned from a fact finding trip to Atlantic City and reported her findings to Carol Oteri, of Hull, president of C.A.C.G.

Mrs. Plante, referring to interviews she conducted with residents of the Atlantic City area, detailed her increased concern about the problems accompanying the introduction of casino gambling and her resolve to continue to provide Massachusetts citizens with the results of her research.

Participants in her survey ranged from an independent shopkeeper going out of business on the resort's famed Boardwalk to the current president of the New Jersey State Senate.

The small businessman, in the process of liquidating his formerly successful camera and film firm, told Plante a story of the woes that began when his pre-casino era yearly rent of $39,000 was increased to $200,000 by his new landlords, the casino owners eagerly buying up a variety of business locations. His shop now reduced to one-fourth its original size, his staff of 40 down to two (the proprietor and his son), he will soon close his doors forever.

Admitting to Plante that he originally voted for casinos, he claimed that he and his neighbors would never make the same "mistake" again, given the same choice. He encouraged her to "keep fighting City Hall because casinos are terrible for business." Like 19,000 Atlantic City residents last year, the disgruntled businessman is selling his home and moving away.

Plante's chance encounter with New Jersey's State Senate leader occurred as she, unaware of his identity, approached him for questioning on the Boardwalk. She described Joseph Merlino as a "nice guy playing Governor for the day," who outlined his "expectations" of benefits to be derived from the casinos.

Before riding off in the chief executive's limousine, however, Plante noted, he was unable to outline any specific new programs or extended benefits directly attributable to casino revenues.

Perhaps the most enlightening experience for the mother of six and her husband, Pat, was what happened as they queried casino doormen about a vantage point where their underage children could legally view the action on the casino floor. As teenagers will, one of the Plante's daughters, two years under the legal gambling age of 18, drifted away from the family group, through the doors of the casino and placed coins in a waiting slot machine.

According to the Plantes, who watched apprehensively when they discovered their daughter's activities, none of the casino's security guards in the vicinity moved to prevent the 16-year-old from gambling or appeared very cautious about entering patrons.

Plante remarked, "As amazed as we were at our daughter's actions, it was extremely difficult for us to seriously chastise her when, unintentionally, she had helped to verify what I had read that very day in Atlantic City newspapers.

Documented statistics from the New Jersey Casino Control Commission reported that 50,000 kids had tried to gamble at the casinos over a three month period. There were 10,000 cases where teenagers had succeeded in gambling before being evicted from the premises, yet no casinos have been charged."

After gathering her brood and ushering them to the third floor observation area, Plante's planned treat of ice cream for each was thwarted by the $3.50 per dish price, ironically the same amount paid per hour to some casino security guards, Plante pointed out.

To gather information on the "ripple effect" of benefits promised to areas by casino promoters, Plante moved on to Wildwood, a resort about 40 miles south of Atlantic City. A motel owner there felt no benefitical spin-off generated by casinos nearby. Plante said, "she told me to Veto casino gambling."

Similarly, the manager of a Wildwood seafood restaurant complained of a 25 percent decrease in business this year, which he blamed on the fact that family vacationers are not attracted to casino locales. A fellow diner at a Wildwood eatery turned out to be a "Casino Host" for the Playboy Casino. He told Plante that "the only business in Atlantic City is casinos — one block away they are starving to death."

The impressions that remain the most vivid for the anti-casino activist were the sights of tourist buses everywhere (129,396 in 1980), and the expressionless faces of the gamblers anticipating "jackpots" which were few and far between. She watched as one man lost $1,000 in less than two minutes at a blackjack table. He moved to another table, pulled three crisp new $100 bills from his pocket, received three purple chips in exchange, and was another $300 poorer with one more deal of the cards.

The words of a stroller on Wildwood's Boardwalk ring in Plante's ears. "The only thing a casino will do for you is raise your taxes. I ought to know. I used to live in Atlantic City and paid $600 a year in taxes. Now they are ten times that!"

Flashers win championship

The Cohasset Men's Softball League concluded its playoffs on Aug. 23 with Manager Bob Ciciotte's "Flashers" defeating Manager Bruce Cameron's "Gang That Can't Shoot Straight," 11 to 5.

Manager Ciciotte attributed the Flashers' victory to Flasher pride. He stated further it was a team effort with all who played contributing to the win. What made it extra difficult was the fact the Flashers had to play without four of their regular players.

Rev. Koehane (2nd base) and Jay Piependrink (CF) were on the injured reserve list and Joe Laugelle, hero of the first playoff game and Phil Thayer, the Flashers' all-star shortstop had previous commitments.

The Flashers were able to overcome this deficit by looking to their own families. Bob Meers Sr., everybody's choice for the league's most valuable player brought his son, Bob Meers Jr., to fill the outfield gap and Bob Meers Jr. performed outstandingly in the field, making memorable catches and providing more left hand batting power to the line up. Watch for this lad in the future.

Bob Walls Sr., the Flashers' flashy infielder, showed up with his son, Bob Jr., to form a shortstop and second base combination that fielded flawlessly and contributed key hits. Even senior Flasher first baseman Peter "Who's this kid Yaz" O'Laughlin drove in two runs in the Flashers' first inning which saw the Flashers overcome a 2-0 deficit and walk away with a 5-2 lead never to be headed again.

Clouting Ken Ekberg, the Flashers' brilliant third baseman continued his hitting, which makes his bat one of the most feared in the league. Bob Morgan, the Flashers' centerfielder and Larry Schultz, the one man outfielder who covers more ground than grass, continually received cheers from the loyal band of Flasher rooters who religiously found their way every Sunday afternoon to Deer Hill Stadiumto encourage their heros on to win after win.

Manager Ciciotte, who also caught a flawless game, summarized the day's activities when he stated that no one could have beaten "Iron Mike" Abbruzzese who pitched his usual dependable game and backed his pitching performance with some sharp hits.

"Bullet Bernie" Mulcahy pitched well enough to win most games, but some erratic play by the "Gang" permitted runs to score that should not have scored.

The season was long and hard-fought with the other teams in the league, the Black Rockers and the Gators, constantly threatening the leaders; but after the dust settled the Flashers had won their second championship in three years.

Strawberry Parfait Centerfielder J.L. Murphy loses his hat while making a diving catch against the Marshfield Benchwarmers. It was efforts like Murphy's which paved the way for Strawberry Parfait to become South Shore Civic League champions. (Derr photo)

Hartwell finalist in N.E. Jr. Golf Tournament

Jeff Hartwell of the Cohasset Golf Club was a semi-finalist in the New England Junior Golf Tournament, 12-year-old division, held last week at the Ponkapoag Golf Course.

In five days of golf, Hartwell defeated boys from Fort Worth, Texas, New York and Vermont. He lost on Friday to the winner, Jim Campbell, son of Ken Campbell, the pro at Newton-Commonwealth Course.

The N.E. Junior Tournament Small Fry Division was started in 1963 and has become one of the most prestigious junior golf tournaments in the country. Entrants this year traveled from Japan and London to participate.

New police log

The Cohasset police log, unabridged and unedited, is in European time these days. Or military time, whatever it is called.

Time begins at 00:00, which means midnight. Noontime is 12:00 and 1 p.m. translates to 13:00.

In transcribing the Cohasset police log, we no longer go through the light, breezy style of the officers on duty and erase the names and street numbers. What we do now is to decipher the coded numbers for the log incidents and try to guess which section of town the geo-code, as they call it, circles.

As the police officers on the Cohasset desk learn the system, which is already used by Scituate, more and more will probably be coded.

Police Chief John DeBassio has said the written explanations will be continued for items not covered in the codes. Still the log has decreased in volume drastically in the past few weeks while the system is being studied and applied by the men.

Softball for Easter Seals

Cohasset Auto Body ended its slo pitch softball season on a happy note Sunday by raising $328 for Easter Seals.

CAB beat the Teamsters Pub of South Boston 12-0 as CAB pitcher Irene Angers limited the Pub to two hits and allowed one walk.

It was a happy day for CAB which fell to defeat against Road House of Marshfield in the finals of the Women's Slo Pitch Softball League in Braintree Aug. 11.

CAB lost the first game of the best two out of three final series 6-5 and finished second to Road House by virtue of a 10-6 score, the following night.

Five errors in the first inning and nine overall paved the way for Road House to score seven runs in the first inning. Pitcher Julie Moore of Duxbury scattered the final three runs. CAB kept picking away by scoring a run or two every inning but fell short of tying the game.

Against Road House, Kathy Coleman, Irene Angers had two hits, Donna Herbert of Cohasset contributed with one hit and Maureen Gavaghan had a long double.

Gavaghan had injured her ankle during the semifinals but came back to play both games of the final series.

In the Easter Seals charity game, Coleman, Julie Moore and Joanne Cuneo had two hits. Moore and Cuneo hit home runs and Hale and Gavaghan each contributed with a hit.

Each member of the team received a jacket and trophy for finishing second in the Braintree league. The team hopes to come back stronger for next summer's competition.

Democrats searching for rep. candidate

A group of citizens from Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset have established the "Third Plymouth Democrats" organization with the goal of seeking effective representation in the state House of Representatives for this legislative district.

Organizers, who represent a broad range of views of local interest, say their purpose is to unite behind one individual whose candidacy they will support in the 1982 Democratic primary and general elections.

The group got its start in July at an open meeting in Cohasset chaired by Donna McGee, Cohasset Democratic Chairman. Over the summer, the group developed a questionnaire for the potential candidates, identified issues of key importance to the district, and proposed procedures for a candidate selection caucus to be held in November of this year.

At the caucus, to be held November 3 at 7 p.m. at the Hingham Town Hall, potential candidates will speak before and answer questions from interested Democratic and Independent voters. Following the question period, a ballot vote will be taken to determine which of the potential candidates the group wishes to support.

A preliminary meeting will be held September 16 at 7:30 p.m. in the Cushing Room, Route 3A, Cohasset, to approve rules and procedures for the November caucus.

Individuals interested in seeking the Democratic nomination for State Representative are encouraged to attend, as are all Democratic and Independent voters from the three town district.

For more information about the September 16 meeting, call: Donna McGee, 383-9114; Janice Colby, 749-4034; or Pamela Wolfe, 925-5151.

De Vanna Center

The Dianne De Vanna Center for the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect will begin its fall training session for interested volunteers on Monday, Sept. 14 at 7:30.

The training will take place in Braintree. Training for the Hot-Line will consist of one two-hour class per week for eight consecutive weeks.

If you are interested in volunteering for the Hot-Line or as a parent-aide, call the Center at 843-7010 for more information.

McKinnon raps DPW

State Sen. Allan McKinnon (D- Norfolk and Plymouth) has sent a letter to the state Department of Public Works protesting the manner in which construction is being conducted at the Fore River Bridge in Weymouth.

McKinnon charged that poor planning has resulted in lengthy rush hour delays for thousands of motorists.

"Because construction is already taking place at two locations along Route 3, South Shore commuters have had no travel alternative since the bridge project began," said McKinnon. "With work on both arteries (Route 3 and Route 3A) occuring simultaneously, it is only fair to the thousands of South Shore commuters who must use Route 3A and the Fore River Bridge daily that congestion be alleviated wherever possible."

The women from Smith get together

By Patricia Desmond

A quiet group of bright Ivy League women sat around the luncheon table last week, talking about what there is to do at Smith College in Northhampton.

The sun shone brightly outside, lighting up the wooded shores of Little Harbor, outside the window.

"Try not to miss the lectures," one of the freshmen advisors said while huge brownies were passed around the table.

The young women talked about facilities, courses, special programs under the auspices of the South Shore Smith College Club.

Shelia Evans, who was hosting the annual freshmen lunch, poured ice tea.

One of the alumnae, Jane O'Sullivan, explained that Smith is more nurturing of its students than other schools in the Ivy League.

"It used to be a traditional women's school," she said. "It's changed since I graduated in 1968 when most of us were in the broader liberal arts. Now a third of the school is in math or science."

She said 65 percent of the Smith graduates go to graduate school within five years of finishing.

"The philosophy is that Smith isn't a training school. That comes later in graduate school. Smith gives a broad background," she said.

She talked about the changes in the past few years as emphasis has shifted away from dance and performing arts to astronomy, pre-medical courses.

"Dance is still strong, but other programs are strong too."

She explained the lunch for incoming freshmen is just one of the nice things that happens to help students find rides, make friends, ease the transition.

Crane has money to give

State Treasurer Robert Crane announced this week that his office will be attempting to return $811,608 to more than 6,000 Massachusetts residents under the State's Unclaimed Money Law.

Treasurer Crane noted that these monies have been turned over to the Treasury by insurance companies doing business within Massachusetts. Included in the proceeds are; unpaid life insurance benefits, unpaid endowments on term insurance and unpaid benefits on health and liability insurance policies. "Ninety percent," said Treasurer Crane, "represent the cash value of term life insurance policies which many owners do not realize they are entitled to claim."

Under the State's Unclaimed Money Law (M.G.L. c 200A) accounts which have been unclaimed for seven years are declared abandoned and turned over to the Treasury. Treasurer Crane then tries to locate the rightful owners to return their monies to them.

Individual entitlements from these unclaimed insurance accounts range from $25 to a largest single account worth $21,000. A breakdown of accounts:

RANGE	CASH VALUE
$25-$100 (4,498)	212,727.09
$100-$500 (1,583)	314,267.73
$500-$1,000 (168)	112,616.66
$1,000-$5,000 (77)	134,634.55
$5,000-$10,000 (3)	16,155.54
More than $10,000 (1)	21,207.34

TOTAL, 6,330 — $811,608.91.

State Treasurer Crane commented that: "For too long the insurance companies of Massachusetts have made little or no effort to locate the owners of these unclaimed accounts. This practice must stop. We've already taken the John Hancock Insurance Company to court for withholding what we believe to be in excess of three million dollars worth of its customers' money. My office will continue to protect the interests of anybody who owns unclaimed property with the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

For Cohasset the Treasurer's list is Leo J. Happeny and Grace M. Happeny.

How to claim your money.

If your name appears on the State Treasurer's Unclaimed Money list, published in today's newspaper, call or write:

State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane
12th Floor McCormack Building
1 Ashburton Place
Boston, MA 02108
Telephone:
523-1042

Outside Metropolitan Boston:
1-800-632-8027

To facilitate processing your claim, Treasurer Crane urges you to include your name as listed in the newspaper, your address and identification number (if printed in the paper) on all communications.

Unclaimed Money lists will be available at most city and town Treasurers' offices.

Owners of abandoned property need not pay a finder's fee to anyone to claim what is rightfully theirs.

'Kids all spiffed up'

Schools open smoothly

By Patricia Desmond

School opened this week with the precision performance of a marching band.

So maybe there were one or two characters out of step by a moment. The overall performance was one of fast-moving percussion.

Enrollments were just a little higher than expected.

School Superintendent Eugene Crowell was out driving behind the buses on opening day. He and John Raftery had put together the bus routes, which he said were working.

A half dozen or so youngsters reportedly waited at their old bus stops. The new routes were published in all the local papers in the past week.

The misplaced children were still in school, although officials weren't sure whether the bus drivers made extra stops for the first day only or whether the youngsters were brought to school by their parents.

Evervone contacted said the first day went well.

Richard Streeter, high school principal, was rushing about all day, checking on scheduling and such. He took time out to say the opening went well. The cafeteria at the junior/senior high school sold more lunches than expected even at the 80 cent figure.

Kenneth Ekberg, principal of Deer Hill School, said the students there were enthusiastic and happy to be back in school.

He spoke with the students as their day began and described the opener as having gone well.

John Creamer, principal of the Osgood School, echoed the same piece of positive information.

"They dress especially well for the first day," he said. "The girls with their patent leather shoes and pretty dresses. The boys are all spiffed up too."

One high school student's comment on the day was that he wondered when the changes of Proposition 2½ might be seen.

"My classes seemed about the same size as last year," he said with a tone of surprise.

"Sink or Swim," Jon Ferris seems to be saying a he launches his boat at Duck Pond on Cohasset Common. (Derr photo)

It's official, lunch 80 cents

School lunch is up to 80 cents a day. Dessert will be an extra charge most days at the junior/senior high school. Snacks will be sold after school.

Breakfast will cost 65 cents and milk alone will cost 20 cents.

Kindergarteners will be asked for $1 a week for milk and cookies. At the same time the price of an adult lunch is going up to $1.40.

Last spring the lunch price went from 50 to 65 cents as the school committee made the program self-sufficient. The current price is slightly more than the current costs would necessitate, according to school officials.

When the price went up, about 20 percent of the students eating school lunches started bringing them from home.

The school committee also approved use of $2,100 in the school budget to get the lunch program started this year. Like other communities around, Cohasset is facing a budget crisis because of delays in state reimbursements due the town.

Patricia Wunschel, who runs the food services program, said last year the cost of a school lunch in Cohasset was $1.20. She said the average cost would decrease this year since that reflected the expenditure of a large sum for equipment.

Jack Langmaid, school committee member, looked over the information at the public meeting last Tuesday and said he thought the price should be set at 75 cents.

Reduced price lunches will be 40 cents under the program. The federal government will pay the town $1.10 for every free lunch distributed, but there are few of this in this town.

School Superintendent Eugene Crowell said the school committee might be able to gamble and set the 75 cent figure but that they also might be forced to put through a second increase in the near future, if they followed that course.

He said the program is already $6,000 in the red and blamed the thief who broke into the high school and made off with $4,000 in tools this summer.

"I'd rather play it safe," Crowell said.

He plans to try an after school snack program consisting of pizza, hot dogs and hamburgers, to raise extra revenue.

At Deer Hill ice cream sales are expected to increase.

The salad program will be expanded.

New discipline code at CHS

Students who cut classes might fail their courses according to a new tight discipline code proposed for the high school.

School officials can't seem to remember when the last suspension was meted out. Under existing regulations of the state department of education the school system is not allowed to suspend or expel because the rules aren't written down and distributed.

The new discipline code is similar to the rules already in effect, according to Eugene Crowell, school superintendent.

The difference is the result for infractions. Under the discipline system of the past, demerits were handed out to violators. Some teachers didn't distribute demerits as required, Crowell said.

A separate policy on drugs and alcohol, which can also be described as strict, is being worked on. This code, which would be the first printed in recent years, provides that students possessing alcohol or illegal drugs would be sent to the principal's office to be suspended for five days.

But the most controversial part of the new document, which is printed in full elsewhere in The Mariner, is that students who cut four classes or study halls without excuse will receive an F for the term.

After presenting the concept to the school committee for discussion at the meeting Monday, Sept. 14, Crowell talked about the idea with representatives of the local press.

He pointed out that places where the failing concept for cuts has been shot down were systems where the F would be the year's or course grade.

He said he thinks students would still have an incentive to learn the course material after earning the failing grade because they would have a chance to pass for the year.

"Or the material might be needed to move on to the next level," Crowell said. "Like Algebra, the

Cohasset's week

Mailbox fire

This is a story with an unhappy ending.

The trouble is the people who will suffer the most are the ones who don't find out about this small item from the police log.

Sunday afternoon there was a mailbox fire in front of the Stop and Shop on Route 3A.

Everything in the box was charred.

The remains, mostly white ashes, are being kept at the police station while an investigation proceeds. Burning mail is a federal offense. Cohasset police assume the fire was started by a youth.

Anyway, whether or not the culprit is found, the mail left at that box Saturday or Sunday this week cannot be delivered.

Police dispatcher

Another negotiating session was scheduled for this week in the continuing case of the police department civilian dispatcher.

Yvette Rattenbury was hired for the job several months ago without prior negotiations with the police union. The state labor relations commission ordered the town to bargain in a decision reached last month.

Sources say last week's bargaining session made no advances.

Search for $

The water commissioners are looking for $485,000 in state money to upgrade the water mains.

The town would be required to match the amount, should the grant come through, but it would not affect the tax rate since the water department is self-funded through the water bills.

Most of the money, $475,000, would go to replacing the water mains on Atlantic Avenue from Hugo's to Nichols Road and on Border Street from Elm to the Scituate line.

The other $10,000 would pay for a leak detection study of the entire system.

There has been a problem with water main break in the area scheduled for replacement.

Drug assistance

Cohasset police rescued a young man suffering from "bad drugs" this week.

Lt. Charles Stockbridge was on the desk Sunday afternoon when a young man called from the pay phone on Route 3A by the A&P, looking for help.

He told police he thought he had been given angel dust unknowingly.

A cruiser picked up the young man and took him to the station where he was put in a cell, in protective custody. No charges were brought.

The youth said he had been hitchhiking on 3A and was picked up in Hingham by someone who gave him a joint of marijuana. He smoked it by the time the car reached Cohasset where he was dropped off.

He started feeling badly and decided to call the police for help. In the cell he became violent, according to reports.

The fire ambulance was called to transport the youth to South Shore Hospital where he could be treated. Patrolman David Pomarico went on the ride to keep the peace.

Afterwards Pomarico said the youth quieted down in the ambulance but he thought he could hear his heart racing.

"He was really out of it," one officer said.

Murray backs bill

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, is backing a bill to outlaw drug paraphernalia, as it is called.

The bill is in third reading in the Legislature.

She says she hopes it is one of the first bills enacted after the new session gets underway.

Septemberfest plans

Final preparations are now underway for the Cohasset Community Center's annual September-fest which will be held Saturday, Sept. 19 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the village common.

Always an exciting event, this year's festival includes many of the traditional favorites such as the crafts and flea market tables, games, pony rides, and rowboat rides on the duck pond and, of course, the traditional German and American food will again be offered.

This year, for the first time, festival planners have arranged for an old-fashioned ducking booth for which many popular town celebrities have already volunteered their services.

A good old-fashioned time is promised for all. Further information is available at 383-0752, 383-0088 or 383-6625.

Political sounds

Ted Ford is making political sounds again.

According to some, it means he's thinking about trying his hat in Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray's ring once again.

Others already thinking about the race which doesn't come up for another year are: Nancy Burns of Hull, Caroline Stoufter of Hingham and others.

School custodians

The school custodians will no longer work a night shift, reducing the budget by $6,000, the amount needed for night differentials.

There will be two eight hour day shifts under the new plan, one from 6:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and one from 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

The change is being made to provide better supervision of the custodial workers.

When the night shift was instituted the idea was that it would be easier to clean the buildings without students under mop. It would also provide a deterrent to breaks and vandalism.

There are only four classrooms empty on average during the school day, still officials feel there will be enough work for the custodians. The amount of vandalism and burglaries has not decreased with the night shift.

The work week will be staggered with some on Monday to Friday and some on Tuesday through Saturday; the same schedule being used before the school committee vote.

School officials are looking into ways of financing an alarm system for the building. Cost is expected to be $5,000 to $10,000.

Intermittent police

Selectmen interviewed five men on the permanent intermittent list sent down by civil service last week.

But Henry Ainslie, chairman of the board, said there will be no immediate appointments.

Former Patrolmen Randolph Feola's resignation has left the force with a vacancy. Another officer is on a six month leave of absence and not expected to return.

Ainslie said the interviews were in preparation for filling the slots.

Another man on the list is still to be interviewed. The five already talked to by selectmen include Richard Yocum, also the dog officer, Lawrence Ainslie, Donald Ainslie, John Small and Edward Connor.

Senior Citizens vote

Cohasset Senior Citizens are invited to vote for their choice of Silver Haired Legislators Tuesday, Sept. 15.

Discipline ...

incentive to learn is the need to master the material for another level."

Some parents reacted immediately to the new system, calling it too harsh a change from the old, more lax way of dealing with students.

One mother said she strongly objected to the idea of mixing discipline and academics.

"If a student can cut classes and still get good grades, something is the matter with the classes not the student," she said, refusing to have her name appear.

"I don't want my child to pay for my remarks," she said firmly.

She said the discipline system should be written down as proposed and that she agrees with just about all the rules.

"I think detention is a fine punishment and so is in-school suspension. For some of the more troublesome students, it may very well be a family problem causing the behavior and have nothing to do with school. Cases should be considered with some latitude. Nothing should be cast in concrete the way this seems to be. Counselling should be one of the first alternatives for students. Maybe they'd discover the courses are boring. Maybe they'd find a way of helping the kids."

The discipline plan will be discussed before a school committee vote.

The first cut leads to an after school session. In-school suspension for one day is the second punishment. Three-day in-school suspension is the third punishment. The fourth results in a three day out of school suspension. Then the failing grade is used.

Parents will be involved in the discipline process long before the grade failure, Crowell said. He expects it would take a student 12 days to reach the final failure.

School lunches ...

Between the state and federal government, the lunch program is stil subsidized to 16.5 cents each. Between the cuts made in the federal lunch program and the loss of the town subsidy (voted last year) the lunch program costs have gone up 15 cents each.

At Osgood nothing much will change about the program except the price.

Mrs. Wunschel said there may be less variety as the system concentrates on serving the lunches that appeal to the students.

Diana Kornet, committee member, suggested that if the lunch program suffers another 20 percent loss of participation, it might mean a drastic increase in the cost of lunches.

"Then we'll reduce personnel," Mrs. Wunschel said.

Some committee members were concerned about the money transferred for start up costs of the lunch program, wondering how the money could legally be turned back into the general school budget account.

Crowell said that if there is difficulty, the lunch program will assume payment of some school bills.

One resident told the school committee she'd be happy to pay the new price.

"After what I've been spending this summer, I'd be glad to send my kids to have an 80 cent lunch."

When it came time for the actual vote, the five committee members were silent, waiting for a motion.

After a pause a member seemingly joked, "I don't want my name attached to that."

Richard Conley, committee member, moved the price increases as recommended by the administration, after a moment of silence.

The vote was 5-0.

Cool reception to new Wompatuck access

The idea that the second access to Wompatuck State Park might go through Cohasset is being thrown around official circles.

It's unlikely to win any widespread support in town but then the people in Hingham tried to halt the park as it developed and failed, local officials say.

The U.S. Army Reserves is considering a plan to move its facilities out of the government property all together. Most of the federal land used by the reserves is in Cohasset.

The final decision is in the distance. As of now reservists have suggested the 500-member battalion be moved either to Fort Devens or Brockton. Defense Department officials would have the final say.

People in the state Department of Environmental Management have been talking with officials of Norwell, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate — the towns with land in Wompatuck — for over a year. The state has been looking for a way to put the second access route to the park closer to Route 3.

There has been little support for the second route in any community. It seems Hingham wants another route badly — but it wants that other route to be located in another community.

Super Mom wrestles with lunch

It was the night before the first day of school.

Super Mom was ironing, everyone else was tucked and folded into bed. The washing machine was saying kerchugga, kerchugga, screech. Super Mom ignored the mechanical monster. After all that device was only providing underwear. Top name manufacturers were putting out everything else the children would need for the morrow.

Of course no one helped do the little things that needed to be done, like erasing the crease lines on limp but new dress shirts, or pulling out the common pins, or making lunches.

Actually this was the first time in more than a few years Super Mom was forced to make school lunches. The kids had been buying them.

July always seemed to like whatever was on the menu. In her secret heart, Super Mom knew she just liked carrying the tray with her friends. And dessert always did please her.

Gosh never liked the school's selection of nutrition in a pattern. He said nutrition was bad for his health. He also complained about the long wait in line.

Wren would be doing the Kindergarten thing for the first time. At nursery school juice and cookies were part of the program. Now he would be switching to milk and graham crackers.

Mit was, unfortunately to the world according to Super Mom, still considered too young by school officials and the rest of the world alike.

Anyway the reason Super Mom was packing away those decrusted, white bread, tuna fish delights was the price of lunches.

She reasoned that she would never have enough change to pay the high cost of a cafeteria special so she would have to give the children a $1 bill each day. That would be $2 a day or $10 a week.

They would never bring home the change, she told Beloved as she explained why he and she should alternate making the brown bags the way the kids would like them.

Beloved stood firm. Well, actually he sat firm. He'd been sitting in his office in a straight back chair when she found him.

"I already do my share of housework," he answered with a whine of self-pity. "I do the dishes four nights a week and keep our room clean."

"You forgot to do the dishes once last week and the last time our room was clean your parents were coming for a visit," she retaliated with a pity all her own.

"Why can't they make them themselves," he countered skillfully.

She collapsed under the house of cards logic contained in the approach.

July and Gosh took the news of their lunchmaking with as much grace as two wounded buffaloes.

July pointed out that she always has to do everything. Gosh pointed out that he's the only child ever asked to help.

Beloved hid wherever he was, out of sight, and listened breathlessly.

And that was that. The two went to bed early the night before the start of school. They went to bed without even being asked. Of course they forgot to make their lunches.

Super Mom sighed, realizing her trap, with a sigh that could have put out a small forest fire. She went about the kitchen, making sandwiches built on hope. Her hope was that they would want something more special and do it themselves.

But who would want something better than tomato, onions and processed cheese on week-old Italian bread.

She thought she heard Gosh cry out "Betrayal" in his getting ready for school sleep.

Taste of 2½

School started this week with fewer buses and fewer pupils than last year. The budget is pared to the proverbial bone, or so school officials have been telling us.

Now we are getting a taste of what Proposition 2½ really meant when we voted for it.

Did it mean we didn't want the finest possible education for our children? Did it mean we wanted fewer street lights?

Of course not.

What we want and expect is for school personnel to keep on coming up with innovative ideas that will find alternative funding sources for something as important as junior high sports. It would be too difficult to go to the community to raise funds for a science fair at the high school or new reading texts at Osgood.

We expect good old Yankee ingenuity to cope with the tax crunch that makes even the owners of $200,000 homes say uncle.

It's the start of an exciting and challenging era — the days of 2½.

It's a time when every school and general government expenditure should be looked at with a microscope. We wonder why Martha Gjesteby, as a school committee member, seems to be having such trouble getting to look at the school department bills.

Those bills are supposed to be available for everyone's inspection. Certainly a school committee member shouldn't have to ask for the bills. And just as certainly she should be given a quick accounting, if she is forced to ask.

In the case of the school committee warrants, there now seems to be universal agreement that one member may not sign the warrants for the full committee. The problem still remaining seems to be one of poor communication.

Let's hope that when we voted for Proposition 2½ we weren't really voting for slow communication.

Subscription cost

With all the problems of budget cuts, we can't help but wonder why the school system decided to renew its $320 subscription to Labor Reporter, a magazine.

It seems $320 could buy a few books or a gross of baseballs — something the students could use. If there are serious union problems in the school system, a magazine isn't going to solve them, the competent help of a labor lawyer might.

School Committee member Martha Gjesteby brought the matter to public attention, pointing out that the budget item for the specialist magazine was deleted in the school budget last fall. The subscription was paid out of the "pre-buy" money the school system found, money left over from last year's

School bus purchase challenged

To Cohasset School Committee

I am concerned.

1. At the last meeting of the Cohasset School Committee, Mrs. Irene Brown, Mr. Richard Conley, and Mrs. Diana Kornet, who voted in favor of purchasing the 1968 GMC bus and the 1970 GMC bus at $1000 each for transporting Cohasset school children refused to reconsider their vote.

Before purchase of these two buses, the town-owned bus fleet consisted of a 1977, a 1976, a 1975, two 1972's, and a 1968. This latter bus, the registry inspector told the administration, may not pass inspection without expensive repairs, according to the Superintendent.

I feel the School Committee should consider obtaining newer buses, since they have more safety and comfort specifications, for example, soft seats. I have not heard the Business Manager make a presentation at the open meetings to the school committee or to the public regarding State reimbursements on the purchase of new buses. In fact, under Chapter 71 purchase of school buses may be written off over a period of five yeras. For example, a $20,000 bus would be charged off at $4000/year for five years and the refund to the town would be that per cent funding voted by the Legislature. According to the State Dept. of Education Bureau of Data Collection and Reporting, under Section 7A of Chapter 71 the State funded entitlement on regular transportation allowed 91.37 percent in 1977, 59.24 percent in 1978, 57.34 percent in 1979, 60.36 percent in 1980, and 55.88 percent in 1981. $20,000, therefore, in bus purchase reimbursed in those five years would have resulted in a $12,967.36 state refund, or a real cost to the town of approximately $7,032.64. Furthermore, when you own buses, you are not paying a contractor his "profit margin."

Cohasset has several streets with steep hills and narrow winding roads which are accident prone. I have had the experience of having my only daughter come home from school and allege that the Cohasset School Bus on which she was riding "lost its brakes and would have crashed into a stone wall, except for skillful handling by the bus driver."

The administration has been considering requiring that Junior/Senior High school students who live less than two miles from the High School be required to walk to and from school (unless there are safety hazards, such as crossing Route 3A). Again, I have not heard the Business Manager/Bus Coordinator inform the school committee and the public that under Chapter 71, Section 7A, the State reimburses for all youngsters who live 1½ miles or more from the school attended, measured by a commonly travelled route. After a $5.00 deduction per child per year, the School Department can put in for reimbursement costs. The State Legislature has been funding this as listed above, in excess of 50 percent (55 to 91 percent). Curiously, I have learned that some proposed bus stops where there are no apparent hazards, such as lack of sidewalks or major highway to cross, include stops far less than 1½ miles from the High School, for which pupils there is no entitlement to reimbursement.

2. When Mrs. Martha Gjesteby, at the last school committee meeting, requested a school committee meeting on the proposed bus routes, with the public invited to participate, before the routes were posted in the newspapers, she was thwarted by the verbal opposition of the Business Manager, to the dismay of many audience members, some of whom publicly protested.

3. School Committee member, Mrs. Gjesteby, made another request of the School Committee which was not honored. She requested that the School Committee have a public discussion (as did the Hingham and Scituate School Committees) of the 1980-81 budget surplus, which this past June may have exceeded $75,000, so that the School Committee members could publicly participate in setting priorities for expenditures or returning any funds to the town, instead of just following the administrations's recommendations.

4. Perhaps even more serious, is the fact that Mrs. Gjesteby asked to be put "on record" at the last school committee meeting, objecting to the fact that she had not been notified or given copies of warrants which had been signed by Mrs. Brown, Mr. Conley, and Mrs. Kornet. After the publicized objections of former School Committee Chairman, Mr. Frank England, Town Counsel ruled that it was not legal for just new member Mr. Conley to sign the warrants — it had to be a majority.

In the past, the practice under Chairmen Golden, Langmaid, and England, which I experienced as a former Cohasset School Committee member, was that warrants which are lists of bills by vendors and amounts to be paid, were usually included in the packets sent to all school committee members three to four days in advance of the public meetings. This gave all school committee members the opportunity to go to the Business Office to look at bills, or budget that was supposed to go for payment of items planned for in the new budget.

Since it looked like every dime, let alone every $320, in the new budget was needed absolutely we wonder what expense will be cut out.

The official answer is that since the money came from the old budget, it doesn't affect this year. But the school committee backed the administration in planning for the use of last year's leftover funds to reduce the impact of Proposition 2½.

Well, maybe the cut to pay for the magazine will come from administrative salaries.

To Mary Jeanette

Here's to Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray for her bill to outlaw the State Lootery Commission's new game: slot machines.

When even government spends its creative energy thinking of ways to make a fast buck, it's time to wonder where we are headed.

telephone and ask what a bill represented, if they wanted information on what they were authorizing by their signatures, and moreover, the warrants were usually voted on in public session.

Mrs. Gjesteby refused to vote for the year-end transfers in particular because she had never been given the opportunity to see, in addition, the $107,000 warrant of June before it was signed and presented for payment to Town Hall. This warrant included a lot of "pre-buy" for the next fiscal year. Is it the intent of the three members to disenfranchise Mrs. Gjesteby and Mr. Langmaid from voting warrants in public session? I have attended meetings of many other town boards and school committees where all members are allowed to participate in fiscal matters and approval of bills in public sessions.

5. The Cohasset School Committee also instituted a new kind of scholarship. After I told a school committee member that I did not feel that the money should come from the budget raised by taxation, unrestricted moneys were found in the Nichols Scholarship monies.

I do not object to the fact that the very gifted child of a school department employee was given approximately $500 towards attending a summer mathematics session held at Milton Academy. I do feel that if the school committee was going to establish a scholarship, it should have been publicized ahead of time, and that all the gifted members of the Junior Class — as evidenced by their report cards, PSAT, SAT, Achievement Test, SRA scores, or other criteria, should have been notified and given the opportunity to apply. Students are given notices and opportunities to compete via application for other scholarships, such as Rotary, etc. Those Junior Class youngsters who had invitations or opportunities to attend Duke, Harvard, or other summer schools might also have been given consideration.

6. Formerly the school committee averaged two meetings per month (more at budget time). Since the April elections the committee has only met on the average of once a month. I feel more meetings might give more time to discuss common goals, and allow more public participation on issues such as budget surplus, bus purchases, bus routes, drug and alcohol policy and other needed policies, as well as the proposed new student conduct regulations.

7. Under chairmanship of Mr. England, even controversial questions were discussed openly and at length last year in public sessions. In fact he encouraged public debate of issues. We were not in the habit of receiving memorandum marked "Confidential" from the administration on subjects not covered under the law as for executive session only.

A man telephoned me to say he had discovered that instead of publicizing and publicly discussing the bus routes in June, as former Chairman England had requested, a memorandum went out from the Business Manager at the end of June to the School Committee with a draft of the proposed bus routes, urging that the bus routes not be publicized at that time or brought up at a public meeting. The reason given was that otherwise it would precipitate many unnecessary telephone calls and wasted involvement with parents and others prior to finalization. Furthermore, these routes had not yet evenbeen shared with the principals. I object to parents not being given much time to participate since these new routes will only be published a week before school begins.

School Committee drafts goals

School committee goals like challenging the students with academic work, changing the marking practices of some teachers, providing a positive atmosphere for learning and better evaluating the staff are suggestions for the system.

School committee goals, as outlined in a draft by Martha Gjesteby, were accepted as suggestions.

There was no debate with the concepts proposed by the school committee woman, nor was there a formal and binding vote on adopting the goals as a matter of policy.

Diana Kornet, another committee member, said she thought the proposed goals were fine ideas "but not appropriate for us as a school committee."

Some of those fine ideas included the establishment of a reading list for summers for Kindergarten through Grade 11 with a short report due each fall.

Some grades use such lists, some don't, Mrs. Gjesteby pointed out.

She said the student council is the place to start work on one of her goals — the installation of pride in academics.

On the marking system, Mrs. Gjesteby advocates use of the bell curve.

"It's self-defeating to tell the students at the start they will have few A's or that straight A's will never be given. A positive learning atmosphere should be the goal."

She thinks the school system has special problems dealing with its brilliant students.

She wants extra projects given to students for credit, to be done either at home or at school.

She wants the guidance services reviewed.

"Does each course have relevance and does each challenge the entire range of students," she asked.

She wants the SRA test scores reviewed and evaluated so that trouble spots in the curriculum can be identified.

"How is curriculum developed," she asked.

"Staff evaluations should be so clearly written that they will stand the test of time," she said.

She wants the administrative team to revise job descriptions in view of the reductions in staff necessitated by Proposition 2½. She wants the policy manual updated.

She wants counselling of students evaluated to see whether curriculum needs, careers and similar matters are being dealt with.

She wants course suggestions to come from faculty.

Committee chairman Irene Brown said she agreed with everything Mrs. Gjesteby listed.

The committee plans for further discussion of goals this year.

Football jamboree Friday, Sept. 11

Not for a lot of years has there been a high school football jamboree hereabouts. But that will change as of Friday, Sept. 11 with all South Shore League teams competing in a grid jam session under the lights at Middleboro starting at about 6:45 p.m.

Norwell grid coach and athletic director Dave Walsh pushed hard for the jamboree, and league teams agreed to participate in the dress rehearsal scrimmage with full game uniforms, officials and 10-minute periods that will see each league team playing two other opponents.

Cohasset will have the distinction of literally kicking off the program at 6:45 p.m. engaging Hull while Holbrook and East Bridgewater test each other, then take on Cohasset and Hull in following matchups with that action scheduled for an 8 p.m. conclusion.

Then it will be Walsh's Norwell Clippers at 8 p.m. taking on arch-rival Hanover which NHS won't see again first hand until Thanksgiving morning in their traditional holiday season capping game. Norwell then will test ever-more SSL powerful Duxbury.

Abington, Rockland and Middleboro will then take over after which Hanover will test Duxbury's 1981 edition.

"There will be no breaks, just continuous football action from 6:45 p.m. until about 10:15 or 10:30 p.m at the latest," advises Walsh.

Admission is only $2 for the grid-fest.

The action is slated at the Middleboro field which is located behind the Middleboro Junior High School in Middleboro Center.

One easy route is to take Rte. 18, branch off at Rte. 28 and turn left on the rotary onto Rt. 105 to Middleboro Center and the field.

Milk contract continues with Hendricksons

School children who are given sour milk will be turning it back to their teachers as officials attempt to find out how much spoiled milk is being sold in the schools and why.

The milk contract with Hendrickson's Dairy of Abington was continued on a school committee vote of 4 to 1, Jack Langmaid was opposed.

Henrickson's, which has had the contract five years, was the low bidder at 13.5 cents per carton. The milk will be sold for 20 cents a carton, to cover the handling costs.

"Too many times I've heard about sour milk," Langmaid said as discussion of the usual routine item came up last week.

He suggested the contract be awarded to Hood since the difference was "negligible" and the schools might get better milk.

School Committee Chairman Irene Brown said she's heard rumors of the sour milk but that she doesn't know anyone who has ever gotten it.

"Well my children have," former school committee member Patricia Walsh said from the audience.

Holly Grant, a student representative to the school committee, said she has only gotten the soured milk a few times.

Diana Kornet, committee member, said she's heard complaints from children in the last lunch at Osgood. She suggested efforts should be made to keep the milk cold as long as possible.

Langmaid said it happens all the time at Deer Hill. He said there is no way he would vote for the same supplier.

John Raftery, business manager, said the problem might be the school system's handling of the milk. The handling system will be checked.

School Committee member Richard Conley suggested that the problem wouldn't be concentrated in certain schools if it were the fault of the supplier.

He said the problem lies within the school system.

Obituary

Mildred Odermatt

A solemn high Mass for Mrs. Mildred E. (Harkins) Odermatt was concelebrated Saturday in St. Anthony's Church.

She died September 2 at home after a long illness.

She leaves her husband, Alfred G. Odermatt; five sisters, Viola Harkins and Ruth McClure of Arlington, Dorothy MacDonald of Woburn, Helen Conlan of Hyde Park and Marion Terrazano of Florida; two brothers, John Harkins of Readville and Stanley Harkins of California.

Burial was in St. Joseph's Cemetery, West Roxbury.

The Rev. William Mullin, formerly of St. Anthony's, was principal celebrant of the Mass. The Rev. Ralph Enos, C.S.S.R., gave the homily. The other concelebrants included the Rev. Roger Nollette, O.S.B., and the Rev. Arthur Doherty of St. Mary's in Hull.

Master of ceremonies was the Rev. Mr. William McKinnon, deacon. The Rev. Mr. James Scollans of Scituate was crossbearer.

John Harkins and Barbara Sullivan of Roslindale gave readings. Thomas Bunting served as organist and choir director for the church choir. Altar boys were Robert Tis and Thomas O'Brien.

Donations may be made to the Society for the Propogation of the Faith, the Catholic Television Mass or the American Cancer Society.

P&B hike no concern

A quick survey of Plymouth and Brockton bus riders in this town brought out one surprising fact.

The fare increase that went into effect last week was about as much of a concern as a mosquito bite. More of a concern to the five riders discovered disembarking a late afternoon bus near Cohasset Village is the spotted time schedule of some of the drivers.

One woman said the P&B saves her a conservative $4 a day.

"That's just when you compare the cost of gas and parking with the price of the bus ticket," she said as she walked away. "The saving is more when you think of the fact I don't have my own car anymore."

A young man said he hasn't noticed any change in ridership since the fare increase took place.

"You see the same people, day after day. You almost know them. They're all still taking the bus," he said.

Meanwhile the fight against the larger fare hike requested by the P&B goes on.

One man, who exited into a waiting car, said he didn't mind this increase but he had no intention of paying another price jump a few months from now.

"I'm going to try the commuter boat," he said with a sneer in the direction of the vanishing diesel smoke.

Scott Liquors faces suspension

Scott Liquors on South Main Street faces suspension of its license over the sale of alcohol to a minor.

Police Chief John DeBassio will report tonight (Wednesday) to selectmen on a recent incident at the store.

The chief said one of his officers observed a minor leaving the package store with liquor. The minor was arrested.

"There never before was a policy on it but now we hold both the youth and the store responsible," the chief said.

About two months ago the Riddle's Market on Route 3A was given a one-day suspension over a sale of alcohol to a minor. The store instituted tighter requirements for proof of age afterwards.

Chief DeBassio, who was appointed roughly a year ago, has tightened up procedures on policing liquor stores. Officers on patrol are required to sign a log kept inside liquor stores in town, insuring that once each shift, a police officer will be by.

"In the past the youth was prosecuted but nothing was consistently done on the licensee," the chief said. Six months ago he asked for and received permission to act as the selectmen's license agent.

Outgoing officers are: Rod Hobson, vice president; Nancy Sladen, treasurer; and Alma Ekberg, secretary.

Come browse and register for the drawing.

For more information call 383-0292.

Bus Drivers

School bus drivers will have four sick days this year.

In the past the drivers had no sick days, holidays or seniority system for choosing routes.

Eugene Crowell, school superintendent, met with the non-union drivers a few weeks ago and worked out the details of the new benefits.

School committee last week approved his request for sick days for the drivers.

The drivers had also asked for bereavement leave and two paid holidays.

He instituted the system of seniority for selection of buses, routes and overtime without the need for school commitee approval.

Student Insurance

School committee last week approved the extension of the current student insurance contract with Somers, Kitchen and Essler.

Bids for ice cream, special needs transportation and physical education supplies were awarded to the low bidders.

Drug Policy

The school health committee may soon accept new members but they have already debated the new proposed drug policy.

Nancy Clapp, committee member, said the regulations drafted by the school administration were dealt with in some stormy sessions in the drug and alcohol subcommittee.

"There are some very questionable areas," she said.

The policy has been turned over to town counsel for research.

Eugene Crowell, superintendent of schools, said the regulations will be discussed by students and faculty now that school is underway.

Sports Fund-raiser

The sports fund-raiser brought $8,672 to the school system according to the tally released last week.

The money will be kept in a special account in the athletic revolving fund. It means programs for junior high sports plus extra equipment for the high school sports.

Resignations

Two school workers resigned last week. Both resignations were accepted by the school committee with regret. They are Kathleen Hernberg, an aide, and Robert Pattison, a custodian.

Appointments

The following appointments were made by school committee last week: Alison Ayer, parttime special services aide at Osgood at $3,540 a year; Nancy Gilmore, special needs aide at $7,358; Richard Hebert, custodian at $5.74 an hour; James Sullivan, assistant football coach at $1,605; Philip Pisano, assistant football coach at the same rate; Clare Brady, JV field hockey at $963; Michael Stewart, freshman football coach at $1,284; and Alvardo Amano, girls' JV soccer, at $963.

Opening exhibit at S.S. Art Center

The South Shore Art Center is holding its Opening Exhibit of the Gallery this season and also its reception on Sunday, Sept. 13 from 5 to 7 p.m., showing Peter Anderson's miniature paintings, Irena Roman's drawings and Elaine Wentworth's watercolors.

Peter Anderson, who was educated in Scotland and England, is primarily a professional photographer and is currently teaching at the South Shore Art Center, Rhode Island School of Design and the Cambridge Art Center. Anderson, whose photographic career has taken him to such places as New Guinea, Mexico, South America, Southeast Asia, and Hawaii, is a former Time/Life photographer and has been on the faculty of the New England School of Photography and International Center of Photography with Cornell Capa in New York.

In the current show at the South Shore Art Center Gallery, Peter Anderson for the first time is exhibiting his miniature paintings. To quote Peter, "I had been 'dabbing' at Painting in Miniature form for some years until a recent contact with Zen Buddhism offered an exciting opening to extend the experimentation of using one brush, one color and a freedom to let images form themselves without planning or direction."

Irena Roman, who received her BFA in illustration at Massachusetts College of Art, also attended New England School of Art, Art Institute of Boston and the DeCordova Museum School in Lincoln, Mass. She is self-employed as a free-lance illustrator working for national and local ad agencies, design studios, publishing companies and newspapers.

Among her many awards, she received in 1980 the Silver Medal for Excellence for Overall Work from the Boston Society of Illustrators, the 1981 First Prize in Drawing from the Juried Show of South Shore Artists, Duxbury Museum, Duxbury, and the 1981 Award for Best Drawing, Springfield Art League.

Elaine Wentworth, a graduate of the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, has won national recognition both as an artist and as an author, her most recent awards being Best in Show Award, 1980 National Art Exhibit of the National League of American Penwomen, Washington, D.C., and the 1980 Third Prize, New England Watercolor Society, Boston. Her national juried exhibits included American Watercolor Society annual exhibitions, New York City 1974-1980 and the 12th Annual Watercolor West, Utah State University, and traveling exhibit of western states. She has also exhibited widely in regional and invitational exhibits and her works are in corporate and museum collections including the Farnsworth Museum in Rockland, Maine.

Wentworth has published "Mission to Metlakatla," with 46 pen and ink drawings (Houghton Mifflin, Boston, 1968); "Ruf Nack Metlakatla," German, 1973, and her book about a tribe of Tsimshean Indians is included in several library rare book collections.

This exhibit runs from Sept. 9 through Oct. 3; the Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m., and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. For further information, please call the Center at 383-9548.

QUESTIONS MY NEW PATIENTS MOST FREQUENTLY ASK.

WHAT IS CHIROPRACTIC?

Chiropractic is that science and art which utilizes the inherent recuperative powers of the body and the relationship between musculoskeletal structures and functions of the body, particularly of the spinal column and nervous system in the restoration and maintenance of health.

ARE SCIENTIFIC METHODS UTILIZED IN CARE?

Yes. In general, diagnosis plays the same role in chiropractic as in all the healing arts. The basis for determination of the treatment:

Consultation. During the initial consultation, every measure of observation that will more substantially profile the condition of the patient is employed and recorded.

Physical Examination. The doctor of chiropractic conducts a systematic and thorough examination using the methods and techniques that are standard with all health professions. In addition, he includes a postural and spinal analysis which is unique to the field of chiropractic.

Diagnostic Aids. The doctor of chiropractic uses the standard procedures and instruments of physical and clinical diagnosis and is well acquainted with the need for differential diagnosis. Diagnostic x-ray procedures, especially as they relate to the skeletal system, are a primary clinical diagnostic aid in chiropractic.

Laboratory Tests. Doctors of chiropractic are knowledgeable in the standard and the special clinical laboratory procedures and tests usual to modern diagnostic science.

WHAT ABOUT CONSULTATION AND REFERRAL PRACTICE?

Under chiropractic care, a patient is either treated or referred after a comprehensive differential diagnosis, arrived at by utilizing an orthopedic and neurological examination, an x-ray examination, laboratory procedures, or whatever other procedure is necessary to determine what type health care is suited for the patient's complaint.

Going to school? Here are the rules

ATTENDANCE

Students are required to be in homeroom at 7:45 a.m. Students arriving after 7:45 are required to report to the Attendance Office for an admittance pass. Students will be assigned to a minimum of 15-MINUTE DETENTION BY THE HOMEROOM TEACHER.

Students absent from school are required to have a note from their parents stating the date and reason for their absence. Students who do not return a note the second day following their absence will be detained each afternoon until the note is received. Students will be allowed two days to make up work for each day missed due to exused absence. Work that is NOT MADE UP after this two day period will receive a ZERO for any recorded mark.

Parents have become increasingly ready to excuse their child's absence or to have their child dismissed for reasons that are substantially less than legitimate (e.g. shopping trips, hairdressers's appointments, working on car, etc.) We ask that you consider carefully your reasons for dismissing your child from school or having him absent. We will not dismiss students by telephone request. State statute requires that students attend school 180 days per year.

DISCIPLINARY DETENTION

Students assigned disciplinary detention are to report after school on the day that the detention is assigned. Students should be aware that disciplinary detention takes precedence over all other school activities.

Parents are asked to cooperate in this area particularly. We feel that it is important that our students develop an understanding that their actions have consequences, and that they cannot forestall disciplinary action with an endless chain of excuses. Please ensure that your child is available daily until 3 p.m. and do not make commitments for him/her until after 3 p.m. unless absolutely necessary.

SPECIAL NOTICES

Special notices are distributed midquarterly or when the quality of the student's work warrants parent awareness. Students who receive special notices are to have them signed by a parent and return them to the teacher within two school days. Failure to do so will result in detention. Announcements are released to the local newspapers the day before special notices are issued to students.

SUPERVISED STUDY

Teachers are available to help students every afternoon except Friday during the after school period (1:53 - 2:35 p.m.). Students are encouraged to make every use of this privilege and opportunity. Students experiencing academic problems may be required by the subject teachers to remain for extra help.

HOMEWORK

Most major subjects will require 45 minutes homework each night. We try to ensure that every student is provided with an adequate environment for study. Be sure that your child has adequate time and space at home to complete his assignments effectively. Spot check your child's homework occasionally and encourage him/her to maintain high standards in carrying out all his/her assignments.

DISMISSAL

Students who are to be dismissed during the school day are to present a dismissal note to the Attendance Office before school. We will not dismiss students over the telephone except in emergency situations. Students who receive permission for dismissal MUST check out with the Attendance Office prior to leaving the building.

THE SCHOOL DAY

All students will report to the school at 7:45 a.m. and remain until 1:35 p.m. each day. Students in special programs as Alternative School, Work Study, or individual consideration are the only exceptions. Buses will leave at 2 p.m. Teachers will be in their rooms until 2:35 p.m. for extra help.

Except for morning and afternoon arrival and dismissal and passing between periods, students will NOT BE ALLOWED IN FRONT OF THE SCHOOL BUILDING.

Passes will be used to check students who are passing in the building after the start of the period.

During the lunch periods, students will REMAIN EITHER IN THE LUNCHROOM OR IN THE AREA DIRECTLY BEHIND OR AT THE SIDE OF THE SCHOOL.

SMOKING POLICY

The following smoking policy has been adopted by the Cohasset School Committee on October 1, 1973, for grades 9-12. This action in no way condones smoking:

1. No smoking is allowed at any time within the school building.
2. Smoking is allowed outside the building on the school grounds, before school and after school with the exception of the following areas:

A. NO SMOKING from the Main Entrance to the Junior High Wing.

B. NO SMOKING in the Courtyard.

C. NO SMOKING during the hours of school 7:45 a.m. — 1:53 p.m. IN FRONT OF SCHOOL BUILDING — ALL AREAS.

VIOLATION: Students will be detained after school.

DISCIPLINE POLICIES AND PROCEDURES

Explanation of terms and procedures:

SUSPENSION:

The temporary exclusion from classes. A suspended student is prohibited from all school-related activities.* Following the first suspension, a student will be provided the opportunity to make up any test missed during the period of suspension. All such tests must be made up within three (3) school days of return to class. Total responsibility for arrangement for any such test lies with the student. Students will be given no opportunity to make up any work missed during any subsequent suspension occurring during the school year. All suspensions are for three (3) school days. Parents will be notified by mail of any suspension with reason(s) for such action. The Superintendent will be notified upon the assessment of a third suspension during any one school year. Subsequent multi-suspensions may result in exclusion by the School Committee.

*School related activities: Any/all activity under the juridsdiction of the school, i.e., athletics, field trips, plays, dances, etc.

OFFENSES:

School Tardiness:

Students arriving after 7:45 a.m. must report to the Attendance Office. The student will report to his/her homeroom that afternoon. Tardy students will be detained for a minimum of 15 minutes. Students tardy by more than 15 minutes will be detained for a time equal to lost time.

Any student entering the building after 7:45 a.m. — who fails to report to the Attendance Office — will be considered TRUANT.

Truancy (First Time)

Any student who fails to attend school without just cause will serve four (4) days of detention after school.

Truancy (Second Time)

Any student who is truant for a second time will serve a three (3) day IN-SCHOOL suspension.

Truancy (Third Time and Beyond)

Any student who is truant three (3) times or beyond will serve three (3) days OUT-OF-SCHOOL suspension.

The student cannot return without a parent conference and notification will be given to the Superintendent.

STUDENTS WITH THREE (3) OUT-OF-SCHOOL SUSPENSIONS WILL BE REFERRED TO THE SUPERINTENDENT AND THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE.

*Students are responsible for all assignments, but NO CREDIT WILL BE GIVEN FOR WORK MISSED.

Classroom Tardiness:

Any student who arrives late for a class without a pass or justification for his tardiness will be considered tardy. For this tardiness, the following procedure will be implemented:

1. The student will report to teacher after school.
2. If student fails to report to teacher after school — that teacher WILL NOT ADMIT STUDENT TO CLASS next day and student WILL BE SENT TO ASS'T. PRINCIPAL'S OFFICE.
3. If student has a pass or justification from ANOTHER teacher — he will be allowed to return to class.
4. If student HAS NO PASS OR JUSTIFICATION from another teacher — STUDENT WILL THEN BE ASSIGNED TO DETENTION IN ROOM 14 — FOR THE REMAINDER OF THE CLASS PERIOD.
5. Student will also have to report back to the teacher that same day for detention.
6. If student FAILS TO STAY FOR TEACHER THAT SAME DAY — STUDENT WILL BE ASSIGNED ONE (1) DAY OF IN-SCHOOL SUSPENSION IN ROOM 14.
7. If student continues to disregard this procedure — student will be given three (3) days of in-school suspension — and further — three (3) days of

The program is open to both boys and girls in grades 1 - 9. The 1st and 2nd graders will not be part of regular League play. Rather they will be offered a clinic and scrimage among themselves at the Osgood School. All teams in the League will play Saturday mornings.

James Gallagher will be the program coordinator this year. He is a member of the Recreation Commission and has much experience coaching and organizing sports programs for children.

Parents who wish to help by being a coach or assistant coach are urged to call the Recreation office at 838-6791. Your interest and help will be greatly appreciated not only by the Recreation Dept. but the children as well.

Coach John Leone directs a quickness drill and his message to the Cohasset High Skippers is reaction.

out-of-school suspension.

Notification will be given to the Superintendent at this point.

Students have five (5) minutes to get to their next class.

IF DETENTION IS TO BE GIVEN — BE SURE THE STUDENT IS SO NOTIFIED — ORALLY AND CLEARLY.

We would like to stress that if the teacher finds a problem developing with any student — the teacher should immediately notify the parents.

Unexcused Absence From Class:

Any student who deliberately fails to attend a scheduled class or study hall will be disciplined as follows:

. 1st. Cut: Make up the time after school with the subject/study teacher.

2nd Cut: One (1) day of IN-SCHOOL suspension.

1. The teacher will notify the parents by phone or by the "Discipline Referral Form" that the student has cut his/her class TWICE. (Send parent "pink" copy of form).

2. The teacher will also notify the Assistant Principal that this is a SECOND cut. This may be done by sending the Assistant Principal the "green" copy of the "Discipline Referral Form." The "yellow" copy is to be kept by teacher.

3rd. Cut: Three (3) days of IN-SCHOOL suspension.

4th Cut: Three (3) days of OUT-OF-SCHOOL suspension.

1. Student will receive an "F" mark for the Quarter.

2. Notification to the Superintendent.

Unexcuses Absence From School Grounds:

Any student recorded present — who is found off the school grounds during school hours (7:45 a.m.-1:53 p.m.) without just cause will be disciplined as follows:

1. Student will receive four (4) days after school detention.

2. Notification to the parents.

If student continues unexcused absence from school grounds — we will be forced to suspend that student.

Malicious Acts of Misconduct:

Any student acting in an unbecoming way (disrupting class, using obscene language, showing disrespect for school personnel, etc., failing to report for administrative detention or found guilty of destroying/defacing school property or any person's private property) will be reported and sent to the main office.

Alcohol and Drugs:

Any student found guilty of possession of alcoholic beverages or of nonprescriptive drugs will be reported and sent to the main office and IMMEDIATELY SUSPENDED FOR FIVE DAYS. During the suspension period a parental conference must be held.

Any student attempting to sell or distribute alcoholic beverages or drugs will be reported and sent to the main office and the appropriate legal measures taken as deemed necessary by the administrator. A parental conference must be held as soon as possible.

Any student regarded to be under the influence of alcohol or nonprescriptive drugs will be:

1. Immediately reported and escorted to the main office.

2. Detained until: (a.) Parents are notified. (b) Examined by a competent person.

3. If suspension is verified, immediate suspension will result.

When any student if found guilty of a second offense in any of the above, the administration will refer the matter to the superintendent for his recommendation to the School Committee.

The above rules (Alcohol and Drugs) apply to all school activities as defined in page 3 and to all school buildings and grounds.

School Board to act on Outdoor School

Outdoor School, an expérience in Grade 5 at Deer Hill, will get school committee blessings sometime next month.

Last year the program moved from Camp Wing where it had been a spring program toThompson's Island in March.

At the time the change was announced there was some discussion among unhappy parents about the safety of the children sent out in the chill of late winter to an island in Boston Harbor. Despite cold weather, which kept the students inside at the heated facilities on the island, the participants termed the program a success.

Kenneth Ekberg, principal of Deer Hill, said he plans to meet with his staff and evaluate the program before bringing back a recommendation.

There is a possibility the program may be kept at Thompson's Island but held later in the spring. If that happens the cost would rise substantially since price depends on season.

School committee members suggest the students could help raise the needed money.

Revaluation brings an interest charge

By Patricia Desmond

The town used revaluation to get around the tax cutting mandate of Proposition 2½ and now the first bill is coming due.

Town accountant William Signorelli said the Town's turned to revaluation as an answer to the problems of Proposition 2½.

The legislation requires communities to tax at 2½ percent of their total valuation. Because of revaluation Cohasset was not forced to make drastic cuts in the budget.

Treasurer-collector Gordon Flint expects the town will be forced to borrow money in anticipation of taxes beginning next month. If money from the tax bills starts flowing into the town treasury by December — a prospect not certain — it will cost the town about $20,000 in interest. There's $4,000 in the budget to cover interest for the entire year.

The assessor's office has been working long hours on the revaluation project. But the figures are not yet ready. The best estimates are that the figures will be ready by the end of this month. Once they are complete, the state must certify them. People in the state Department of Corporations and Taxation can't say specifically what sort of timetable they can keep, but they say it may be three months.

There's no way of giving people an official word on what will happen to their tax bills when the new valuation figures are complete. Officials won't or can't talk about the new figures at this time.

Property in town is appreciating at different rates. It is appreciating quickly.

Most valuations as they stand today are less than 50 percent of the property's market value. People who know the value of their land and buildings say the values vary from one third to 50 percent.

Town meeting authorized the revaluation over a year ago, under pressure from the state. When the budget was prepared last spring, officials hoped the revaluation would be complete by the fall so tax bills could go out on schedule.

But by now there's little chance of that happening.

Once the state does certify the valuation figures,

Summer ended at 8 last Tuesday morning

By Carlene Laney

The official end of summer may be September 21, but to all the school children of Cohasset it ended at about 8 o'clock Tuesday morning, September 8 with the beginning of a new school year.

Excitement was in the air as the buses pulled into the Joseph Osgood parking lot, although there would be a slight delay as the teachers made last minute preparations, the small freshly scrubbed faces were beaming in anticipation of the host of new adventures, the biggest of which was the first day of school.

Jody Kehoe had already made some new friends on the short bus ride and was eagerly awaiting lunch time to open his new lunch box full of goodies.

Jennifer Heffner brought peanut butter and jelly, which is a classic in the sandwich department, although there probably were some variations such as peanut butter and marshmallow, bananas, raisins and more improbably, my husband's favorite of peanut butter and onion. It seemed to be half and half on bought lunch and lunch boxes.

Ben Sparks brought a dollar to buy a hot lunch, which seemed a bit steep to me, but he assured me that he'd receive some change.

Everyone had something new, be it shoes, clothes, dungaree skirts seemed to be the rage, a lunch box, pencils and/or notebooks.

Stephanie Lynn Corona had all of the above plus she's also new to town. Her mother, Donna Cleverly, was in early to register Lynn into the first grade, having just moved here from a farm in Fort Tobacco, Maryland.

The teachers had the classrooms already prepared. When I entered Miss Bowker's room I noticed she had taped the name of each child to their desks to cut down on the confusion, but I'm sure this small touch also put the children more at ease at seeing something familiar.

In the open classroom large bowls of crayons were sitting in the center of each table awaiting the tiny finger onslaught and the beginnings of ABC's and 123's. The bulletin boards will soon be full of new drawings and stories and the children will soon be working on their Columbus Day and Halloween projects.

CHS sports outlook...looking good

By Rob Tis

Summer went by in a flash and all of the students are back in the prison as high school is now referred to since we came back to an incredible influx of new rules obviously designed to crush any student's hope of freedom between 8 and 3, Monday through Friday.

However, the Skippers will be fielding quite a few extremely promising athletic teams. The football team looks especially promising this season.

Do you remember back in 1978 when there was a lot of talk about a really good freshman football team that only lost one game. Practically the whole starting lineup of that squad will be seniors this year. In fact the entire backfield from last year's winning season will be back.

The backfield includes quarterback Kevin Dooley, halfbacks Jack McNeil and Joe Becker who are both tri-captains and fullback Bob Donahue. Mark Gunville as well as Keith Townsend will also see action.

In past seasons Cohasset has had teams that were very small in size. This year the Skippers have some people who will be able to throw their weight around on the line. This include tri-captain Paul Buckley, Pat Conlan, J.T. Price, Bill Cuff, Don Mackinnon, Rob Whelan and Andy Spalt.

The football team has had two semi-scrimmages in which they played against two or three teams. They did well in both. On Saturday they faced Cardinal Spellman High School in a scrimmage.

Cohasset's week

Applicants sought

The selectmen are looking for applicants interested in being on the cemetery committee. Two more members are needed.

And on the question of lots at the town graveyards, Arthur Clark, executive secretary to the selectmen, has found 200 more lots in the Woodside Cemetery. The area is at the edge of the town cemetery and is already laid out on old plans.

Clark told selectmen this week a special or annual town meeting will need to appropriate some money for the site work needed on the land which is now covered with brush and woods.

With the consensus of the board, Clark will get prices for the work.

"We are fast going to run out of graves," Clark said. Some fill will be needed. Conservation commission approval is not required, according to Clark.

Donations needed

Donations are needed for the Cohasset Community Center's white elephant table at the Septemberfest Saturday, Sept. 19.

Contributions may be left at the center, 3 North Main St., between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m., Monday through Friday, or call 383-0088 or 383-6352.

One-way okay

Town counsel says the selectmen have the authority to make Wadleigh Park one-way if they want to.

CETA recruiting

The Quincy CETA program is recruiting a limited number of positions in a program that combines classroom preparation for high school equivalency certificates and work experiences.

The program will run four days per week for a total of 26 hours, at $3.35 per hour.

The new program, which begins Oct. 21, is available to anyone between the ages of 16 to 21, and is a high school drop-out and economically disadvantaged.

The deadline for filing applications is Friday, Sept. 25. Applications should be sent to the Quincy CETA Assessment Unit, 11 Hayward Street, No. Quincy, 02171. Women, minorities and handicapped persons are encouraged to apply.

Free cash

The town has $483,556 in free cash, according to the state Department of Revenue.

Town officials point out that the first figure offered by the state was $478,352 with a $69,000 water deficit.

Exec. Sec. contract

Arthur Clark got his contract as executive secretary last week two months after starting the job.

The contract calls for him to work a long week — no number hours are specified. But he'll be working 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. plus whatever else is necessary.

The contract says the job pays $16,500 plus a flat $500 for use of his car. It is a one-year contract with the possibility of termination on five days notice. It does not say that termination must be for cause.

By the contract Clark is afforded all benefits given other non-union town employees except for further participation in the county retirement system.

Liquor violation hearing

A hearing on an alleged liquor law violation at Scott Liquors will be held at 8:30 p.m. today (Wednesday) at town hall by the selectmen.

Cable candidates sought

Candidates interested in serving on a cable television study committee should contact the selectmen.

The board voted to seek out interested applicants without starting the cable application process after hearing from Peter Pratt last week.

Pratt pointed out that Hingham was faced with an application from a company, something that must be dealt with under state mandated time limits, before its study committee could get underway.

The week before the selectmen had decided against meeting with a representative of an interested cable company because they weren't interested.

Soccer program big

There were 170 youngsters who signed up for the recreation department's soccer program last Saturday.

About another 30 youngsters are expected to register late for the program that is about to get underway.

Lost towels & T-shirts

Anyone looking for towels or T-shirts lost during the recreation department's summer playground program may drop by the lobby of town hall and pick them up, according to Recreation Director John Worley.

Taxi request tabled

Selectmen last Wednesday tabled for the second time in a row the request from Satuit Taxi for a taxi license in town.

The town has two taxis in operation, according to Selectman Rocco Laugelle.

Summer ended Tuesday ...

Meka-Marie Laugelle is looking forward to learning how to read and Greg Pyle's new notebook will soon be full of addition and his own creations. When asked what she had learned on the first day of school Emily Summers' reply was, "It was too many things to say."

Michael Russel's comment on the first day of school was, "It was great, but not like going to a birthday party."

Jennifer Knowles was sitting playing with a Rubic Cube, she had two sides done. Pretty good for a first grader.

The kindergarteners each had a tag tied on their dresses and shirts. They looked like beautiful little packages ready to be shipped home. They did seem a bit bewildered standing in line waiting for their return bus ride.

I think most mothers' concerns were shared with Joan Williams, she just wanted her son, Keith, to show up at school without grass stains all over his clothes. She took a picture of him and Jason Porter at their bus stop, maybe for a before and after shot.

Mary Davis and Rita Broderick were in the front office taking care of last minute details such as registrations, as with Lynn, any class changes and assuring mothers that their children would arrive home safely on the bus. Mrs. Davis said that it was nice to see not one child cry while getting off the buses.

Some people seemed to think it would've been an easier transition from summer to school if they could've had an extra day after Labor Day. Most families had planned trips, day excursions or parties and found that having to get the children ready for school the next day was exhausting. To many, Wednesday would've been a welcomed alternative.

Well, I'm sure by now everyone is settling into their routines and is starting to feel like seasoned veterans, the second graders are probably teaching the first graders the ropes. With the end of the first week of school the new clothes aren't quite as new but I think the thrill of riding the school bus will linger for a while and the dreams of next year's summer vacation won't start for at least another month.

As always, the Rotary Club of Cohasset stands firm on our commitment to help maintain the building.

As always, thank you for your continued cooperation.

Bargaining

The police union this week rejected what the town called their last offer in negotiations over the job of civilian clerk dispatcher.

We applaud their good sense, consideration and logic.

The men of the union were told by some they had to take the offer or they would be back at the beginning of the process.

The town's so-called last offer was cruel and as arbitrary as many of their dealings with unioned employees.

That offer was to terminate the woman, Yvette Rattenbury, that had been hired for the job.

Now Mrs. Rattenbury's position was included in the police budget for the year. It was a brand new job, taking the place of one vacancy in the ranks of patrolmen. The town knew the union objected to the position before candidates for the job were ever hired.

But the town counsel's opinion was that it was all right to proceed.

So Mrs. Rattenbury, who lives in town and wanted to work closer to home to be near her son, went to work.

And the union filed a complaint with the state Labor Relations Board. The complaint was upheld — the town should have negotiated the establishment of the job.

According to some people within the police union, the town's only offer to them was the one brought to the membership Monday afternoon as the final offer.

The police officers are not happy with the idea of a police dispatcher who is a civilian. They want that part of her work stricken from her job description. They have no objection to her working as a clerk and with all the new paperwork they've been complaining about lately, it would seem a clerk's talent could be amply utilized.

Civilian dispatchers seem to be the wave of modern police science. There are pros and cons that go beyond the question here.

This is a problem created by the town, on the advice of town counsel. Mrs. Rattenbury was hired for the job by the town without the union's approval. The union by the vote yesterday proved they are willing to negotiate. One of the men said afterwards that they don't want to see anyone fired.

But the union vote was to go back to the town for one more negotiating session. It was not to cave in and let the town ignore the bargaining process.

We want to see the town act responsibly now that its so-called final offer has been rejected. We want to see the town repair the mistake without firing an innocent woman.

Super Mom faces phase-out

By Patricia Desmond

It was a day no different from all other days. The sun rose at dawn, casting an eye-squinting spotlight on the darkened river that rushed to the sea. Birds sang, dogs barked and the children watched television.

But it was the time of reckoning. It was the day July started junior high school. It was time to realize Super Momship is not a permanent occupation.

"But I'll have Mit at my heels for years to come," Super Mom told herself as she brushed her coffee-stained teeth with something that promised it would whiten without destroying teeth fiber.

She could hear a buzz of scurrying children, dressing outside the bathroom door.

"It's mine. Aghhh," Mit said distinctly through the keyhole.

"Give it to him," Super Mom screamed with a mouthful of toothpaste turning her words into a blurr of stern indistinguishableness.

"I can't even brush my teeth," she mumbled at the uncombed lady with smile lines in the mirror.

"It's not his. It's my deodorant," July yelled back, tears just under the edge of her voice.

Super Mom emerged from the bathroom, looking like any other mother at 7:15 a.m., haggard.

"Some women look wonderful early in the morning," Beloved told her later when she was telling the tale of her day. He sometimes missed the point entirely. But at least he tried.

"I have to leave now. He has to give it to me," July intoned in high pitched anxiety.

Junior high school is something not to be taken lightly by a young woman of 11. She had been a fraction or so late for elementary school with a regularity that amazed even her teachers. But this was clearly a matter of top priority. This was the start of growing up, being on her own.

July had her blonde curls brushed neatly into two thick pony tails. She wore a plaid skirt, cotton blouse, nylons, docksiders and a Bermuda bag.

"Everybody has to have them," she explained when they had shopped the week before.

She stood in the hall in all her junior-sized elegance, trying to get a tube of deodorant back from Mit.

The other children, Gosh and Wren, watched a too loud mighty rat cartoon in the next room.

Mit was firm.

"I got to wear it under my arms so I won't get fat," he frowned and squeezed the tube until his fingers turned white as a mouthful of teeth in a commercial.

Mit never did understand why it was July worried about being fat. But he knew that was a prime consideration in most of what she did.

"I can't take gym unless I bring my deodorant," July appealed for immediate aid.

July had never actually worn deodorant before. Super Mom didn't think she needed to sweat to take gym. Afterall Super Mom was a girl once too. She could remember taking gym class after gym class without ever needing to wash her uniform. Or her hands.

But, July still needed her to be a Super Mom this morning.

And while she may have preferred to pour out a cup of electric coffee and slip back to bed with the morning paper, she smiled inside her sleepiness, happy with the knowledge it wasn't time to look for too much maturity in her oldest child.

"Mit, honey, give me that stick thing and I'll make you a bowl of cereal," she said.

"Luck charms," he bargained.

"All right." She took the tube of mock adulthood.

July took it and kissed them both good morning.

Super Mom watched her walk off toward her school with its sports teams and lipstick and peer pressure.

But Mit wanted his Luck Charms right away. And someone else wanted her to fix the television, elementary school being an hour away, and someone else needed clean socks.

Door to door solicitors regulated

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Selectmen are having the bylaw study committee draft an article based closely on the police chief's concept to limit soliciting by businesses.]

Arthur Clark, Executive Secretary

In the course of performing my duties as Chief of the Cohasset Police Department I am frequently confronted with requests from non-profit organizations for permission to solicit door to door in the town, and asked to identify rules and regulations which would apply to such solicitation. I'm sure similar requests are also received by the Board of Selectmen and would like to take this opportunity to provide the following information in the hope that it will prevent inconsistent statements and/or practices.

No person shall go from door to door within the town, begging or soliciting contributions for any person, cause or organization, without first obtaining a permit from the Chief of Police.

Rules and Regulations:

1. Group representatives must produce documentation of non-profit status as certified by the Secretary of State of the Commonwealth.

2. Approximate dates of canvassing must be provided in advance to allow publication in local newspapers.

3. Soliciting should be limited to daylight hours during summer months and not extend beyond 8 p.m. during winter months.

4. A list of solicitors must be provided daily to the police department including names and addresses of all persons canvassing on that day.

5. Pictured identification cards must be displayed prominently by all solicitors while engaged in door to door activities.

Since Section 18 deals with solicitation of contributions and it is assumed that these organizations are non-profit in nature, it is proper to establish guidelines and procedures. There is, however, no present section dealing with door to door solicitations by vendors, salesmen or business representatives, and since these activities are frequently more offensive to the homeowner, I would suggest that some consideration be given to passage of restrictive legislation.

Enactment of an appropriate by-law could include procedures for licensing such activities, fees, and identifying the hours in which such soliciting would be permitted. The Town of Cohasset appears to be a popular source or target for such activities and would be well served by such a provision.

Respectfully,
John DeBassio, Chief

Sgt. Rhodes wants fast action

Mrs. Murray:

As I am sure you are aware, I have been trying to have the lights at the intersection of Ripley Road and Sohier Street replaced for the past four or five years.

This intersection is used throughout the school year by grammer school children, primarily children in kindergarten through third grade level. It is heavily used by children of all ages during the summer in crossing to attend functions at the town operated swim center. Also, the Recreation Department programs are held at the Osgood School during the summer months and many of these children walk to these programs crossing at the intersection.

To say that the intersection is heavily used by pedestrians of all ages is an understatement. Further, it is heavily travelled by motorists as the most direct means of access to Route 3-A from the Village and harbor area, as well as the only means of access to the South Shore Music Circus during the summer months when the Circus is in operation.

My efforts to have these lights replaced have not fallen on deaf ears and I have had several commitments from the Department of Public Works to have these antique lights replaced. However, several times they have lost necessary paper work orders and such, thus delaying the replacement for the past several years.

I have now received word from the office of Mr. Ray Krekorian, D.P.W. that the "tentative" completion date is June 12, 1982.

I pass this information along to you so that my conscience will not be the only one adversely affected by the most probable impending death or serious injury that I am sure is going to take place due to the long delay in replacing this set of traffic control lights.

I hereby tend my request that you do whatever is necessary to expedite the replacement of the lights in question, replacing them with a modern push button control light.

Thank you,
John J. Rhodes, III

around town

☐For all those who may have wondered, Marie Price, popular first grade teacher, will not be pursuing a career in show business. Marie and her husband, Gene, were "having a marvelous time" enjoying a recent performance of Sha NaNa at the Music Circus when Jocko, the groups' drummer, invited her on stage. "Oh, no, I teach in this town," Marie protested but to no avail.

Once on stage, Marie found herself being interviewed. The easiest question, she recalls, was where she went to school. "I just answered, the Joseph Osgood," she says with a giggle.

Many of Marie's students were in the audience that night, and more than one were heard to exclaim, "That's my teacher!" It was a fun time for all. "My only regret is that I didn't have Sha Na Na come in to school the next day for show and tell," Marie laughs.

Word of her successful appearance spread rapidly about town. The next day when Gene was driving their new car about town, he was asked if Marie had already signed a contract in show business.

☐Navy Ensign James Brackett, son of Dr. and Mrs. Philip Brackett of 365 Atlantic Ave., recently participated in the towing of the battleship New Jersey from the Navy Inactive Ships Maintenance Activity at Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, Bremerton, Wash., to Long Beach, Calif.

A 1970 graduate of Tabor Academy in Marion, and a 1975 graduate of Franklin Pierce College, Rindge, N.H., with a bachelor of arts degree, Brackett joined the Navy in March 1978.

☐Another Cohasset celebrity who recently appeared with Sha Na Na is Meka Mari Laugelle. One would almost expect that a six-year-old would be intimidated — up there in front of so many people. But not Meka, who took it all in stride and appeared to thoroughly enjoy herself at the same time.

☐The unsolved mystery at the Community Center these days is "Where are the baby bunnies?" Despite precision planning so that there would be a new family of bunnies to welcome back nursery school children, the center's three new bunnies have mysteriously disappeared. Mother Bunny is currently very unhappy with the situation as are many center members and staff who keep checking the cage hopefully.

Alison Ludlow, 7, wants to smile and look at the world with one eye. She is a first grader at the Osgood School. (Derr photo)

☐Happily, Sally Davenport's four new kittens are doing well. A future cause for dilemna, however, could be in trying to arrive at names equal to that of their mother, Princess Precious Kee Kee Poo.

☐Birthdays are always fun and when two girls who both live in the same neighborhood and are good friends, both turn 16 on the same day, that makes for a very special occasion. Ask Ann O'Connell and Joy Pratt. Happy Birthday from the Mariner.

☐For some reason, birthdays appear to be especially numerous this month among employees at the Town Hall. Many happy returns to Charles Marks, Frances Marks, Gordon Flint, Nancy Snowdale and Kenny Sargent.

☐Belated congratulations to Terry and Barbara Young on the birth of their daughter Dana who has been seen busily attending the many Sailing Club events all summer.

☐A budding poetess has been discovered in Cohasset this summer. Regina Schultz presented her poem, "Luffing Every Minute of It," at the final tack party for the Flying Scot fleet. From all reports, it was enthusiastically received and "carried through" quite nicely. The Mariner has come by a copy and wants to share the lighthearted wit.

☐Welcome to Mr. and Mrs. David Leighton who have recently moved to Cohasset from Toronto with their children, Virginia and Michael.

League sponsors U.N. celebration

The Cohasset League of Women Voters will sponsor an evening celebration of UN Day Saturday, Oct. 24, at the Unitarian Parish House.

This event has traditionally been an enormous success; therefore, the public and League members alike are urged to make arrangements early to attend. The dinner chairman is Mrs. Clifford Mitman and program chairman is Mrs. Earl Foell.

FALL BRUNCH

Thursday, Sept. 17 marks the League's annual fall brunch at the Unitarian Parish House.

The event serves two purposes: to bring old members together and remind them that a busy year is ahead, and to educate new and prospective members on what the League of Women Voters is all about.

Following coffee at 9:30 a.m., longtime Cohasset League members, who are now successfully engaged outside their homes, will address the subject "Careers Through the League." Several speakers will discuss how their past participation in the League has helped them define an interest in skills that eventually led them to their present positions.

Following the program a brunch of quiche, salad, wine, coffee and dessert will be served. The cost of the morning is $3.50, payable at the door.

Babysitting is available on the premises as it is for most League functions, but advanced reservations are necessary and can be obtained through Mrs. Terry Atherton, chairman, 383-1860.

Newly elected board members are:

Barbara Bliss and Chartis Langmaid, presidents; Sherry Becker, first vice president; Marie Caristi, second vice president; Marjorie Izzo, secretary; Denise Desmond, treasurer; Mildred Mitman, bulletin editor; Marylou Lawrence, public relations; Rita Strong, finance; Laura Atherton, membership; Judy Kasameyer, unit organizer; Carol Martin, voter service; Susan McNamarra, Observer Corps.; Janet Dagget, budget; Rita Strong, nominating.

Under the direction of a new, enthusiastic board, the League is looking forward to a busy year examining and studying issues important to everyone. A number of studies and workshops are planned throughout the year, such as housing, health care, hazardous waste management, school finance, casino gambling.

All League meetings take place Thursday mornings; babysitting is available; and the public is always encouraged to attend.

Cohasset meeting on Murphy's campaign

The campaign of Evelyn Murphy for Lieutenant Governor will hold an organizational meeting in the South Shore area on Monday, Sept. 21, at 7:45 p.m. in the Cushing Room, Cushing Plaza, Rte. 3A, Cohasset. Murphy campaign staff will outline organizational goals and the campaign timetable for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

Evelyn Murphy was Secretary of Environmental Affairs for four years under former Governor Dukakis, and is also a respected economist and businesswoman. She played a major role in establishing the safeguards now in place for the exploratory drilling projects off Georges Bank.

Since 1978, she has extended her environmental concerns by serving as chairman of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere, and as a member of the National Academy of Sciences Advisory Committee on the Health Care Costs of Environmental Pollution. At present, she is working on the problem of toxic waste disposal.

Murphy's enthusiasm for the challenges of public service, together with her views on the role of Lieutenant Governor and that office's potential for tackling particularly difficult and sticky problems, have already gained her considerable support statewide.

Interested people in the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset are urged to attend the meeting. Murphy is seeking the Democratic nomination for Lieutenant Governor, but Independents and Republicans who want to work for her are most welcome also. Those who are unable to attend but want to help should call (in Cohasset) Donna McGee, 383-9114 or Karen Corcoran, 383-6767; and (in Hull or Hingham) Caroline Stouffer, 749-2509.

Reading clinic sponsors writing course

The Cohasset Reading Clinic will sponsor a six-week creative writing course called "Some Pieces of Fiction" beginning Wednesday, Oct. 7.

It will be held every Wednesday through Nov. 11, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at St. Stephens Parish, 16 Highland Ave.

The class is open to South Shore students in Grades 9-12 and will be taught by John Gould of Milton Academy. Gould is an English and Creative Writing teacher at Milton Academy, where he has been writer-in-residence for the past two years.

Educated at Williams College (B.A.) and Indiana University (M.A.), he has written two cookbooks and a novel, "The Greenleaf Fires" (Scribners, 1978). He has also taught language skills at Milton, having been trained at the Massachusetts General Hospital Language Clinic. Enrollment is limited.

For further information, call Mrs. Murphy at 383-0839.

Kathleen Donahue opens Cohasset law office

Kathleen Donahue of Minot has opened her office for the practice of law in Cohasset. She will provide general legal services, including criminal defense, divorce, will drafting, and personal injury.

A graduate of Suffolk Law School, Ms. Donahue served as a law clerk to Judge Bownes of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit and was associated with the Boston firm of Oteri & Winberg.

Ms. Donahue is a member of the Bars for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, and the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit.

Her office is located at 69 Ripley Road, Cohasset.

☐Stephen G. Bowen, has returned for his senior year at Cohasset High after a successful summer in the Massachusetts Advanced Studies Program.

Stephen, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Bowen, studied computer science and expository writing during the six-week session. Among those sponsoring Stephen's attendance in the Massachusetts Advanced Studies Program was Cohasset guidance director John Leary, who represents the New England Association of College Admissions Counselors on the program's Advisory Board. The school system contributed $500 to the program in Stephen's name.

Revaluation charges ...

taxpayers will receive notice of the new valuation. They have the right to an appeal, but that appeal doesn't prevent the town from billing them for the taxes in the meantime.

While tax bills are normally due Nov. 1, taxpayers will have 30 days to pay from the date they are sent out.

Flint says he is planning on borrowing enough money in short term notes to get the town through to the end of December. He feels he will need to borrow $800,000 in October.

Borrowing rates have doubled since the last time the town was forced to borrow in anticipation of taxes. Flint said.

The going rates these days for municipal borrowings are approaching 10 percent, he said pulling out a flier on town's already in the borrowing market.

The last time Cohasset borrowed in anticipation of taxes was 1979 when a half million dollars was needed. Rates ran from a low of 4.2 percent to a high of 5.27 percent.

Flint said the rate of municipal borrowing is related to the prime.

There are several reasons for it being a great deal lower than prime. One is the history of municipal notes, they are paid and seem too secure to buyers. Another factor is that the interest is tax-exempt.

Cohasset has an AA rating, something Flint attributes to the affluence of the town.

While borrowing in anticipation of taxes is not a new problem, Flint said such borrowings have been rare since the state changed the fiscal year to run with more coordination to the tax billings.

Before the change in fiscal year, the town borrowed $2 to $2.5 million with some regularity.

"The cash flow has improved 100 percent since then," he said.

CHS sports outlook ...

After the first five plays Joe Becker crashed into the end zone putting the Skippers up by 6.

Paul Buckley found the space between the uprights for the extra point. Not too long after that Spellman managed to tie the score the Skippers then got their act together and scored three touchdowns all by Joe Becker.

Spellman really only had one more shot at scoring with seconds left in the first hald they elected to go for a field goal but noseguard Rob Whelan crashed through the line and blocked it.

It was obvious who was in control so both teams elected to put in the Junior Varsity squad.

The Skippers are under the tuteledge of John Leone again this year as well as assistant coaches Phil Pisano, Jim Sullivan and John O'Brien.

The Skippers face Duxbury this Saturday. Make the trip down and give this team some support.

GIRLS' FIELD HOCKEY

For the last three years Duxbury has not lost a field hockey game. Last year the Cohasset Skippers tied the Green Dragons and this year they want to beat them, and they have the team to do it.

Anne Bear and Sally Cook are the captains of this year's team. Sally along with Kate Cowen, Patty Johnson, Annie Abruzzee, Brenda Whitlow, Gia Barressi and Anne Marie Lagroteria will be scoring the goals this year while Anne along with Chris Karcher, Bridget Farren, Jill Grant, Justine Hoffman, Nancy Kuntz, Karen Froio, Elizabeth Glasfeld and Joy Pratt will be making goal tender Emily Clasfeld's job a lot easier.

Mr. Di will be coaching the Skippers again this year. Come on up to the front field this week and support this hustling team.

BOYS' CROSS-COUNTRY

For the last three years Chris McNabb, Mike Ellis, Steve Bowen, Mark Brown, Paul Johnson, and Jaimie Replogle have been running on the varsity cross country team. This year, Ellis, McNabb, Bowen and Rep are seniors and they think this is the year.

This is an experienced team but it does have new blood. Coach John (Marathon) Mika is taking over the coaching reins from coach O'Neil. Senior Mike Birman has also joined the team as did Bill Thompson.

"We had a great team last year," said co-captains Chris McNabb, "and we only lost two of our top eight runners. We have a good shot at winning the league."

Whatever the case may be I'm sure this team will give its competitors a run (pun) for the money.

GIRLS' SOCCER

In only its third year in existence it looks as if the girls' soccer team is headed in the right direction. On Friday the Skippers took control and edged out a 3-2 victory over Scituate in a pre-season scrimmage. Janet Digilronano and Vicky Keane scored the first two goals to give the girls a 2-0 lead.

Scituate fought back and tied the score at two in the last quarter. Amy Duncomb then took a pass from Jill Nedrow and netted the old pelota to clinch the game for the Skippers.

Michelle Shea, senior co-captain and backbone of the team will be returning to her mid-field position this year as will the other senior co-captain Mary O'Brien. Sue Dalyrmple, Angela O'Brien, Tara Pompeop, Katie Clinton, Ginger Ralph and Vicky Keane are the other halfbacks.

Seniors Christine Barret and Tina Birman as well as Ann O'Connel, Joni Chilsom, Maureen Buckley and Maureen Kelly will be at the fullback position protecting goal tenders Cara Lucas and Tracy Keating.

In the goal scoring position for the Skippers will be Amy Duncomb, Janet Digilronamo, Chrissie Ralph and Sarah Seavey.

Coach Fallon of the CHS physical education staff is at the helm of this team. The first game is on Wednesday and all are looking forward to a successful season.

ANCESTRY a work of art by Cynthia Lanzillotta. The symbols in the black ink piece are created from the four names Cynthia relates to as her ancestry. Her name, Cynthia, her father's name, Heinrich, her mother's name, Shepherd, and her husband's name, Lanzillotta. Each of the people is represented by one of the four symbols built from the names. Cynthia, a calligrapher who lives in Marshfield, said she can create other ancestral artworks on the same principal on order. She teaches for the Scituate Arts Association, the North River Arts Association and Marshfield YWCA.

Identity

By Patricia Desmond

Warm winds,
tangle in my hair,
my too long — too straight, my 10 years out of style hair — directions change,
I turn quickly,
my hair blowing in my face,
wishing I'd brought an elastic.
My sister says
I should cut it off,
she thinks I need
a style more curly bright.
The winds less chilling than yesterday's still whip me with cold and sisterly advice.
I like my hair
I tell her, it reminds me of the woman
I used to be.
Its silver-streaked, undyed honesty, is as close as any image could be to whomever I'm still becoming.
Tangles.
Windblown.
Squeaky clean.
But most of all loose and free.

Jobs available at Rec. Dept.

During the past few months the Recreation Department, through its Job Opportunity Program, has placed approximately 90 Cohasset youth on part-time, intermittent jobs.

In a continuing effort to place youth on jobs of all types, the department is asking any businesses or individuals who have a need for part-time workers to call the Recreation Office at 383-6791 to file their worker requests.

Once a job is filed with the department, you will be given names of individuals who have applied for jobs that fall under the guidelines of your request. From these names you may select any individual whom you feel will best suit your needs. All compensations will be worked out between the employer and employee.

Likewise, Cohasset youths seeking some form of part-time employment may also call the Recreation Office for a job application. Upon completion of the application you will be placed on file as a candidate for possible job referral.

PROGRAM INSTRUCTORS

The Cohasset Recreation Dept. is accepting applications for various part-time teaching positions. Needed immediately are instructors for creative dramatics, low organized games, and jazzercise. If interested in teaching two or three hours per week and you have experience call Jack Worley, at the Recreation office at 383-6791.

If you are interested in an invitation for your sixth or seventh grade child, call one of the following patronesses; sixth graders, Mrs. Harry St. Onge or Mrs. Lawrence Shultz; seventh graders, Mrs. David Lord or Mrs. Philip Shockman.

The general chairman is Mrs. John Staunton.

Community Center registers

There will be a drawing for a door prize, so don't forget to register! Proceeds will go to the Cohasset Boosters Inc., a club which sponsors sports at the high school.

The Boosters Club welcomes the new season, and encourages any new parents to join! Please call Rosie Duffy for more information.

AFS ASSEMBLY

There will be an assembly Wednesday, Sept. 16 for 10th, 11th and 12th graders to explain the AFS program and to introduce two new AFS students.

For those students who are interested in applying for the AFS program there will be a meeting for students and parents Monday, Sept. 21 at 8 p.m. in the chorus room. Be thinking, it's a great opportunity!

AFS students from Tokyo & Finland

By Philip Dormitzer
Graduate Lamplighter

Next year, you could be going to school in Egypt, France, Yugoslavia, India, or even the U.S.S.R.!

The resurrected Cohasset chapter of the AFS is hosting foreign students and sending Cohasset students to any of eighty foreign countries.

Two students arrived in town recently from abroad under American Field Service auspices. Hiromi Yoshioka from Tokyo, Japan is living with the Spooners' on Gammons Road and Johanna Arola from Valkeokoski, Finland, is staying with the Gilmore's on Jerusalem Drive.

Until ten years ago Cohasset had an active AFS chapter, at which time it slowly died out. Today, the program is alive and kicking largely through the efforts of Mrs. Jane Goedicke. George Fortin is the faculty advisor.

The Cohasset branch of the AFS was busy starting this summer getting ready to welcome a foreign student to Cohasset. Nothing was known about this student except that she would be attending Cohasset High School for a full year.

Today, Sept. 16, an assembly will be held, and a student chapter of the AFS will be formed. The students in this chapter will support the foreign students in Cohasset, participate in fund raising activities, and, of course, apply to study abroad themselves.

Students will apply into one of three programs. The first, the Northern Hemisphere Program, will allow students to travel to countries in the Northern Hemisphere where they will live with a family for eleven months of the year.

Students can also apply to go to one of the Southern Hemisphere countries. Because of the difference in the school year of the Southern Hemisphere, students will leave in January and return the next December. In the third program, the Summer Program, students will live with foreign families but will not attend school.

While students can list country preferences, the emphasis during selection is matching students with appropriate families rather than countries. Factors such as family size and interests will influence the pairing of students and families. Anyone can apply from sixteen to eighteen. Those selected will spend either their senior year or the year between high school and college in the foreign country.

A meeting is planned for 8 p.m. Monday, Sept. 21 at the high school to discuss the program with students and parents.

While the AFS can not say with certainty how much aid each student will receive, Mrs. Goedicke emphasizes that no one should decide not to apply for financial reasons. Because the students will not be able to pick the countries where they will stay, the specific language that they have studied in school may not be of use to them. However, basic language proficiency will probably be of great help in any nation.

According to Mrs. Goedicke, the AFS is the "Rolls Royce of exchange programs." She says that there is an extensive network of help available to students in foreign countries.

Judging from the year that she spent in Paris, France, she says that spending a year abroad may not always be easy, but it certainly is one of the most valuable experiences that one can have.

Soon, it seems, lunch tickets will be available for school students as officials grapple with a greatly reduced participation in the hot lunch program.

One of the complaints of parents is that the lunches, now priced at 80 cents, really cost $1 because they never get any change.

Another complaint is the difficulty parents have coming up with the cash on a daily basis.

Eugene Crowell, superintendent of schools, said the ticket system was a suggestion from the staff.

John Rafferty, business director, told the committee Monday that in the first week of school there were an average sale of 380 lunches a day.

"This is not where we would hope to be," he told the group that one week before he had gone along and raised the price of lunch from 65 to 80 cents.

He pointed out that the system hadn't been losing money yet, partly because hot lunches account for only 50 to 60 percent of the nutrition program. Other income comes from sales at the salad bar, milk and breakfast.

School committee by consensus is not interested in selling discounted tickets, one of the proposals.

But tickets for individual lunches, to be sold in bulk packets, will be looked into by school officials.

If the ticket system is implemented there will be no refunds for tickets. But a student will not be committed to eating lunch on a set day.

Patricia Walsh, former school committee member, was cut short at the school committee meeting Monday night as she began to talk about items purchased over the summer that were not in the school committee budget.

Irene Brown, committee chairman, told Mrs. Walsh she had had 10 minutes of the committee's time at the last session. At that session she was complaining about the bus routing system. A letter from Mrs. Walsh on her complaints about the buses ran in the Mariner last week.

Jane Corry, who has taught Kindergarten at the Osgood School over the past week, was given a leave of absence Monday by the school committee for the rest of the school year.

She expects a child in mid-October. According to school officials the leave is automatic according to wording of the contract with the teachers union.

Her leave goes into effect Friday, Sept. 18. There have already been interviews conducted to find her replacement.

Mrs. Corry originally expected to return to work after having her child. She said her family's financial circumstance changed, making it possible for her to take a year off.

The committee also appointed Elaine Paradise as an aide at Deer Hill.

They appointed Ronald Taylor of Dorchester METCO bus monitor at $25 a day.

The school committee wants to make a decision on the Outdoor School, for Grade 5 from Deer Hill, by the first meeting in October.

School Committeeman Jack Langmaid asked that the decision be on the agenda by then. He said he'd had a call from a parent complaining about the fact that the children were not part of fund-raising efforts for the program last year.

Ken Ekberg, Deer Hill principal, pointed out that the only previous joint effort was a car wash and the funds from that went toward financing junior advisors.

Diana Kornet, committee member, said that if the committee decides to hold the Outdoor School at a later time than last year, thus increasing the costs, the money might be needed.

Rose Duffy and Carolyn Songer, officers of the All Sports Boosters Club, gave the school systems its check for the proceeds of the Music Circus fund-raiser, this week.

It came to $8,672, with more donations promised but still unseen.

Rose thanked all the workers including members of the Boosters Club, the Gridiron Club, the Hockey Boosters Club and the Communications Council.

There are 1,465 students in the public school system as of the end of last week in Kindergarten through Grade 12.

Three more students are expected.

Official figures are taken in October but by last October the numbers were 1,541, or 73 more.

In the official projections, the figure 1,490 was used or 22 more than it seems will show up.

Eugene Crowell, school supt., said his own experience indicates the loss of 50 children are needed to justify one staff cut.

The following appointments were approved by school committee this week:

School Board, Crowell defend new discipline rules

School committee debated the new discipline regulations for two hours Monday night as several parents opposed the use of a failing grade as punishment for cutting classes.

The failing grade for a quarter comes after four unexcused cuts. It was adopted by school commitee on a vote of four to zero, with Martha Gjesteby abstaining.

Mrs. Gjesteby said she favors the tightening school regulations but not the use of an F for discipline.

Not one of the parents who objected to the use of failing grades criticized the overall policy which calls for both in-house and out of school suspensions for cutting classes.

A few minor changes were made in the regulations due to inconsistencies in the wording.

Eugene Crowell, superintendent of schools, began the discussion by saying that while he backed the policies, he did not write them. They were written by the high school principal and assistant principal.

Irene Brown, school committee chairman, said the policy is aimed at the students who cut classes for a lark.

"They go downtown for lunch or to the doughnut shop for breakfast," she said.

She said it will be a deterrent.

"Now they just test the limits and the sky's the limit," Crowell said.

Holly Grant, a student representative to the committee, sought a change from a failing grade after four cuts to an F after five cuts. No one made the motion.

Diana Kornet, committee member, pointed out that a student could cut 12 classes a year without receiving a failing grade under the new system. She said her opinion was that was high. The cuts are counted only in one quarter. There would be disciplinary action for each cut.

School officials say the demerit system in effect last year was not effective. It was not uniformly enforced and created bookkeeping problems.

According to the new system, a student would have to cut four of the same classes before receiving a failing grade.

Holly said the students don't like the new policy.

"But you can't expect them to like it. I think it's good, the teachers are following it, if someone's late they are not let into class."

Paul Johnson, the other student representative, agreed the system would be a deterrent to cutting.

Crowell said the problem of classes being cut is not one limited to students who don't want to be in school anyway or students with personal problems.

He said students with problems would be found out during the conferences required under the new policy, he said that for good cause cuts could be excused. "But it's going to be a judgment call," he said.

"My point is we are simply trying to set standards. This practice of cutting classes is spreading to our more talented students.

"We are not just in the business of transmitting information, although in a college preparatory school that's one of the main functions. We are also concerned with preparing our youngsters to be ready for the work world or the military."

He said pressure would be brought to bear on the students who are caught cutting classes.

"I worry about young people who consider any high school an open campus," Crowell said. "We all remember last spring a boy was killed downtown in the neighboring community during time when he should have been in school.

He said special students would be given tutors if they were involved in the discipline process because of state law.

One resident said she heartily endorsed the plan.

Jack Langmaid, committee member, said he would prefer to see manual punishment used, pointing out the custodial staff has been reduced.

Jacqueline Dormitzer said she agreed with the need for tightening regulations but thought in-house suspension would be a strong enough punishment.

Patricia Walsh, former committee member, proposed students be withdrawn from courses after four cuts rather than failed.

She said she has spoken with officials of the state Department of Education who say that while the school committee has the right to implement the policy, they do not consider it educationally sound to use suspension and expulsion for non-attendance.

Mrs. Dormitzer said the use of an F is an excessively severe punishment.

There has been general agreement that in the past the rules were inadequately enforced.

"The students have to find out it's a cruel world out there and it's cold out there, the only breaks they'll get they make for themselves," Committee member Richard Conley said backing the plan.

Crowell said there would be no exceptions for star halfbacks or National Honor winners with the new policy.

Discussion of eliminating the smoking privileges was brief. Crowell said he might be speaking with a forked tongue but that he thought the timing was wrong for the school committee to eliminate smoking entirely on school grounds.

Students are allowed to smoke outside the school in the back under the regulations.

Langmaid said there is still smoking in the lavatories.

"But there's less," Crowell said.

Developing strength against the wind are these Cohasset High School field hockey players who ran with their sticks in a recent practice. (Derr photo)

Fire Facts

Each year approximately 12,000 lives are claimed by fire in the United States. Well over 100,000 people suffer smoke or burn injuries. A high fire death rate seems to be peculiarly an American problem. No other industrialized nation comes close to the American death rate. Fire prevention is the key to solving this problem. The time has come when we need to think about fire safety every hour of the day. Here are some automobile fire safety tips:

- Never store gasoline in the trunk of your car. The vapors can ignite and cause an explosion. A rear-end collision that could otherwise be minor could result in a tragedy.
- If your car has a catalytic converter, don't drive through or park in areas of dry grass or leaves. The intense heat generated by the catalytic converter can ignite these combustibles.
- Unless tuning your car, never run your car with the carburetor air-cleaner removed. The air-cleaner device acts as a flame arrestor if the engine should backfire. If it is not in place, a backfire can easily ignite spilled gasoline or oil on the engine.
- Never discard smoking materials out the window. Always use your ashtray.
- Carry and maintain an approved multi-purpose dry chemical fire extinguisher and become familiar with its use.
- If a vehicle fire should occur, turn off the ignition and other electrical systems that can be quickly reached.
- Get everyone out of and well away from the burning vehicle.
- Call or send for help from the fire department.
- After a fire has been extinguished in your automobile, do not operate the vehicle until the cause of the fire has been determined and corrected.

School Board grapples with senior play

Ron Emmons' appointment as director of the senior class play for $749 was tabled by the school committee after discussion on what a senior class play should really be.

Beth Goff, who applied for the position, said that Emmons was planning to put on a play in the fall using 25 to 35 students.

She suggested the class should put on a musical to broaden participation and increase the size of the audience. She also suggested having the play in the spring to allow more rehearsal time and allow students to get through their time of college application.

Helen Ketchum and Joanne Fitchner told the committee they had volunteered to help Mrs. Goff if she were putting on a musical.

The senior class will be asked to vote this week on whether they would like a musical or dramatic presentation.

Mrs. Ketchum said the $749 fee for a month's work is dazzling. She said she attended last year's senior class play and found Emmons did a good job directing but she thought it was inappropriate to limit participation to a small number.

Septemberfest Saturday

Program committee members of the Cohasset Community Center are busy preparing for this Saturday's Septemberfest to be held on the town common from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

A popular new attraction this year will be the ducking booth for which many town and school officials as well as local celebrities have courageously volunteered. Many crafts and flea market tables will also be offered as well as children's games and pony rides. Row boat rides on the duck pond are another special treat.

Food and beverage tables will be available with both traditional German and American favorites. A good old fashioned family time is promised for all.

$30 to rent T.H.

Use of town hall is up to $30 a day or per evening.

The old fee was $20 for use of the auditorium, with $5 extra if the stage were to be used.

On police appointments

Any new police officer, permanent intermittent officer or auxiliary will be required to pass physical and psychological examinations, according to the board of selectmen.

Welcome back lunch at First Parish

A "Welcome Back Luncheon" has been planned for Sunday, Sept. 20, to celebrate the resumption of church school and youth activities at the First Parish in Cohasset (Unitarian-Universalist).

The congregation extends a special invitation to old and new friends of all ages interested in the activities of the First Parish to worship beginning at 11 a.m. in the historic Meeting House on the Cohasset Common, with a luncheon to follow in the Parish House at noon.

This event marks the opening of church school for children from pre-school age through the seventh grade and for both the junior and senior high age youth groups. There will be an opportunity to meet teachers and advisors and learn about the Unitarian Universalist approach to religion which emphasizes freedom from dogma and focuses on ethical concern and works of service.

Jane McGuinness, the new religious education director, at the First Parish will be on hand to greet the children, young people and their parents. Mrs. McGuinness has been a public school teacher and recreation leader for six years and the Youth Director of the First Parish for the past two years. As Religious Education Director she will now expand her work to include the church school.

The luncheon menu will include cold roast beef, cold cuts, a gourmet salad bar and homemade breads and pies and is being coordinated by Marianne White, Cam Long and Betty Van Slyck.

Newcomers interested in learning about the First Parish are encouraged to attend.

Aux. police interview

Louis Saklad of Hull wants to be an auxilliary police officer in town. The selectmen are thinking it over.

Saklad would be the only one on the unpaid force from out of town, if approved. Selectmen say his credentials are impressive. Before moving to Hull, Saklad served as a reserve police officer in Pheonix, Ariz., and Peoria, Ill. He ran country-wide drug education programs out west.

Dog control law

Cohasset has a dog control law, although there is no leash law. Dogs may not be on anyone's property without permission, according to Selectman Henry Ainslie who said he thinks there is some misunderstanding of the town's situation.

"And we have not given permission for dogs to roam town ways," he said speaking for the selectmen.

'No opinion' wins dog survey

It's been quite some time since the Mariner took to the street looking for opinions from Cohassetites.

The question this week was: Do you think the town needs a leash law?

The scene was historic Cohasset Village where the shops are filled with quaint objects not found in a five and dime, which everyone knows is quaint in today's economy.

The Mariner reporter had her notebook in hand, clearly an identifying mark of the trade.

She walked up to a merchant she knew but didn't know well.

He said he always keeps his dog on a leash but didn't want to be quoted on the subject.

"I have enough troubles without antagonizing some of my customers," he explained.

He did have some views on other topics he did care to share on the record. To avoid exposing his identity, the ideas on how to triple the customers wending through the Village will be saved to another day.

Within a minute or so, a young woman parked her station wagon near the inquiring reporter, obviously heading for the hardware store.

She, also refused to give her name for publication, saying her neighbors would probably have her called before the board of selectmen if they realized she lets her pet pedigree have the run of the community at will.

"I realize I shouldn't really let my dog loose."

Drama envelops CHS senior play

By Patricia Desmond

Will the senior class play be a musical or a dramatic production?

That's the question members of the class of '82 vote on tonight (Wednesday) to settle the question at the school committee's instruction.

For the class with its 141 members the decision is a case of how many really want to take part in the play.

Diana Kornet, school committee member, told the rest of the board at their last meeting that she isn't sure whether the seniors even realize how much fun a play with wide participation can be since it's been so long since a musical was produced as the class play.

Once the class makes its decision, the school committee will choose a director. They can pick Ron Emmons, the high school dramatic coach and past senior class play director, or Beth Goff, a resident who has different ideas for the play.

Emmons had planned to put on a dramatic production. His appointment was on the school committee agenda, as recommended by the high school principal, at the last meeting.

Mrs. Goff brought out her criticism of the class play as a dramatic production at the meeting, suggesting the role of the play should be a "last hurrah" for the class. That would not be possible without widespread participation, she said.

The date for the play is also a matter of controversy. If a musical were staged, it would have to be done in the spring, according to Mrs. Goff who thinks the later the date, the better it will be.

But the play was already tentatively planned for December.

Richard Streeter, high school principal, said the vote will not involve the entire senior class but will be handled by only those seniors interested in participating in the play.

Need a new one, says the state

Dump still has problems

The town isn't sure what it will cost to abide by state decrees on the expansion of the landfill.

Arthur Clark, executive secretary to the selectmen, said once the town's engineering consultant comes up with a plan and its cost, a special town meeting date can be set.

There are other items a special town meeting might consider, like purchase of the Penn Central right of way.

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering has been discussing the dump's problems for some time now. The state wants the town to begin serious planning for the eventual closing of the Cedar Street landfill, which people say may last three to seven years if fully expanded.

The problem with expansion has been the water table of the unfilled land at the dump.

Clark explained that last week the state decided the town could use any clean fill available to raise the level of the low land above the water table. In the past the state had been insisting on a clay base, capping off the water table, as a prerequisite to expansion.

Cost of the new proposal is unknown.

"That's what's holding us up on setting a date for the special town meeting," he said.

"It's the key to the whole thing."

In the meantime the selectmen have regenerated the disposal area study committee. Members of that committee are getting together twice a month working out ideas for the future dumping of the town.

The concept of recycling is one area that is being studied seriously.

Other future solutions include regional acquisition of the Cohasset Heights landfill, or other regional operation. State officials say they are trying to cooperate with the town, which has long been operating its dump outside the current state regulations.

The DEQE is giving the town two months to come up with an acceptable plan.

Clark said the engineers are working on it.

Vicious dogs plague Beechwood

"Beechwood has a problem with dogs. It's very real. I see packs of them," Page Liberty told selectmen after the board held a hearing on three dog complaints.

Liberty lost two goats because of attack by local dogs recently.

He wants something more done about the town's dog problem. Dog Officer Richard Yocum brought the complaints to the selectmen's attention last week even though the three dogs involved had been killed at the owner's requests and restitution had been made to Liberty. The cost of replacing the two milk coats was $991. Each of the dog owners paid a third, Yocum said.

"I'm worried about the safety of my children," Liberty told the selectmen. He is the father of two.

"I intend to replace my livestock. We're going to have the same problem."

He suggested the brutal incident could have involved a child.

The selectmen are looking into the possibility of implementing a transportation fee to be levied on the owner of any impounded dog. Yocum asked for consideration of the fee about a month ago. Since then a letter complaining about a dog problem or a dog hearing has been on the board's agenda every week.

Yocum said he could impound 10 dogs a day in Beechwood, if his budget provided for that.

He also mentioned that people get indignant about having their dogs picked up. He predicted, strict enforcement of the animal control law would bring the selectmen more complaints.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur suggested the dog officer begin an educational campaign aimed at teaching people how to care for their animals.

Yocum is already in the midst of an enforcement campaign due to the high number of unlicensed dogs in town. There are between 700 and 800 licensed dogs. Guesses are the dog population is two to four times as high as the numbers licensed.

He is concentrating on a list of 30 to 40 at present. Some may end up being summonsed into court.

The time of year seems to have something to do with the high number of dog complaints at present, Yocum said.

He believes a leash law, with the necessary enforcement budget, would solve the problems.

His budget this year includes $1,078 for transportation, equipment and boarding of animals. Boarding fees at the Shishone Kennels in Marshfield are

Cohasset's week

Search for applicants

The selectmen are still looking for applicants for a cable television study committee. Contact their office.

By last Wednesday, the board had three official applicants. Names are not yet available for release.

Against casinos

Gov. Edward King has come out squarely against casino gambling, saying the revenue benefits pale when compared to the social costs extracted by prostitution, drug abuse, violence, and organized crime.

"Casino gambling has no place in Massachusetts," Gov. King said. "The problems that inevitably accompany it can be devastating. We've seen those problems in Las Vegas and, more recently, in Atlantic City. If you think it all through and read all the arguments, the conclusion is clear. Casino gambling breeds a terribly unhealthy social environment.

The governor said, for these reasons, he will veto any casino gambling bill that might reach his desk; and use the influence and prestige of his office to keep one from ever arriving there.

"If a casino gambling bill reaches my desk, a veto will fall. And I'm certain that veto will stand."

Casino gambling has become an issue of more and more interest in Massachusetts in the past few years. MGM Grand Hotels of Las Vegas has two sites — Hull and Adams — in mind for casinos, should they be legalized.

The firm last year paid $325,000 for a 58-acre tract in Hull; the company wants to build a 350-room hotel and casino.

MGM has also formed a joint venture with Greylock Associates of Springfield, hoping to develop a casino-hotel on Mount Greylock in Adams.

Affirmative action

Cohasset would like to be listed as one of the towns complying with affirmative actions plans of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

In fact it needs that designation to qualify for a grant the water department wants to replace water main along Atlantic Avenue and Border Street that is subject to recurring breaks.

The selectmen told their executive secretary that if it is possible to get on the list of complying communities by merely signing an assurance, they want it done.

"Sometimes it isn't that simple," Henry Ainslie, board chairman said.

Bus accident

A school bus accident happened last week at Deer Hill School.

Police Chief John DeBassio said the incident was very minor involving a bus that slipped backwards slightly into a car behind it. The paperwork is not complete but there was no mechanical failure. In recent weeks some residents have said some buses are too old to carry school children.

Donate a flag

Anyone with an American flag not being used is asked to think about donating it to the town.

The selectmen say the town needs more flags for various places in town where the flag normally flies. They hope to have the donations by Veterans Day.

Last year's bills

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray wants to know whether the town wants her to file a special bill allowing last year's tax bills to be used for the fall taxes.

Selectmen want to hear from the assessors on the matter.

Possible conflict

Henry Ainslie, chairman of the board of selectmen, pointed out last week that under state law he is the only one eligible to represent the town on the County Advisory Board but because of his regular employment for the county he can't vote on the budget.

New legislation allowing someone other than the chairman to sit as the selectmen's delegate is under consideration, he said.

Low bid to Alco

The bid for a new heating system at Government Island was awarded by selectmen last week to Alco Oil, the low bidder, for $3,140.

Return the $

During the 1980 session, the Legislature passed a bill giving the Secretary of Administration and Finance and the Governor authority to increase about 420 fees and charges.

Just last week, it was announced that the charge for the semi-annual automobile inspection would double from $2 to $4. Of this increase, the state will take $1.25 leaving only 75 cents more for stations performing the inspection. (The increase has since been struck down by the Courts.)

A bill has been filed by Rep. William Robinson and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray to return the inspection fee to $2 effective with the spring inspection.

Derby begins 197th year

Hingham's Derby Academy began its 197th academic year last week. Headmaster Thomas Waters and Board of Trustees President Gordon Berg greeted parents, faculty and students at First Chapel, the traditional opening ceremony held in Sarah Derby Hall.

Waters extended a warm welcome to several new faculty members, including coaches Mrs. James Heggie, Mrs. James O'Neill, Mr. Gregory Boardman and Mr. David Hebert, who will assist with girls' and boys' daily afternoon sports programs.

Mrs. Diane Dufault has joined the academic faculty to reach French I, II and III. Mrs. Dufault, who holds a B.A. from Stonehill College and an M.A. in French Literature from Boston College, comes to Derby from Weymouth public schools, where she has taught for the past five years. The new students had already received a special welcome earlier in the week at a picnic held for them and for their parents by the Academy's Parents' Association.

Mr. Waters announced addition of a new computer room, equipped with two Apple II computers, monitors and printers. A faculty committee, headed by Math teacher Deborah Callahan and including students James Patterson of Cohasset and Jeffrey Breen of Norwell, will oversee planning the computer program.

The Music Department has also expanded, and will now offer Band for Upper School instrumentalists. Stanley Johnson, Band Director at Dedham Country Day School and the Roxbury Latin School, will direct the new group.

The new year began officially for Derby parents on Wednesday as well, at a Parents' Association meeting held immediately following First Chapel. New President Mrs. Mathew Jancsics of Cohasset, led discussion of fall activities, which will focus first on the annual Clothing Sale, slated for Oct. 16 and 17. A gala auction of goods and services, open to the public, will top off the week's work on that Saturday evening.

Parents agreed to hold their meeting in the evening to accomodate fathers and the growing number of mothers who have returned to work.

Enrollment this year at Derby, the country's oldest coeducational indpendent day school, is 242, including students in the four-year-olds' Pre-Kindergarten.

Dog survey ...

she confessed, although we hadn't asked her about her personal life.

"I tell them, when they call, I'm grateful they've let me know the big thing has broken off his run again. It's just hard to think of him tied up all day while I'm off shopping or playing racquetball."

Anyoine who has heard that story three times in one week should already realize what is happening, the reporter warned.

A gentle looking man with greyish white hair walked by next.

He seemed stunned by the question. But after pausing to make sure this wasn't some frivolous joke, he offered as how he always kept his own dog tied up, always had.

"But I don't believe in legislating courtesy," he said.

He wouldn't hear of having his name printed in a newspaper despite his polite reply.

Class play ...

He plans to call upon Emmons and Mrs. Goff to present their views separately to the seniors, explaining the costs and what is involved in each venture.

Understandably Emmons will explain the view favoring a dramatic production and Mrs. Goff will explain the points of a musical.

"While the vote is on whether to have a musical or a dramatic production, it is actually a vote for the coach," Streeter said.

Emmons has told him he is not interested in directing a musical.

Some of the seniors have no interest in the question. Others feel strongly on both sides. There's no way of predicting the outcome.

"You'd like to have some seniors with singing talent to do a musical," Streeter said. "People who coach these things would like to have lead singers who could carry a tune."

Library Friends donate projectors

The Friends of the Cohasset Library voted this week to donate three filmstrip projectors and one cassette recorder to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

David Chittim, chairman of the library trustrees, wrote to the Friends requesting the equipment after the trustees discussed the value of filmstrips and cassettes in the children's department.

Over the year, the library has acquired a collection of children's literature on filmstrip and cassette format. Library staff reported good use by the public of these materials. Existing equipment, a gift of many years ago, is worn out.

The projectors may be borrowed by parents and teachers for use with library materials.

Budget cuts due to Proposition 2½, according to the trustees, mean fewer new materials will be purchased. But trustees concluded use of existing materials should be continued through the purchase of replacement equipment.

In other business, the Friends heard a report on the library volunteer program from Shirley Marten. She described the ongoing success in scheduling more than 40 hours a week of volunteer help in the library.

She reported problems filling all jobs during July and August, but said a full force was scheduled for September.

Library director Richard Hayes said the staff felt the absence of scheduled volunteers keenly. Daily workload has increased 17% as a result of closing the library Wednesdays due to staff cuts. The library has experienced a slight decline in total loans as a result, but most of the business has moved to other days. A 12 percent cut in staff has made the higher daily workload difficult to handle.

The Friends discussed the possibility of recruiting more volunteers. Hayes said the staff would welcome volunteers to shelve books and perform other duties. Anyone who is willing to work a couple of hours now and then on shelving is invited to speak to a member of the library staff.

Laura Doherty looks like she is crowded in a corner as she awaits a customer at the Cohasset Community Center during SeptemberFest Saturday. The celebration was held on the grounds of the Community Center, Town Common and Town Hall. (Derr photo)

around town

Mary Ward of Church St., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Curran, Randolph, has enrolled in the Nursing (R.N.) program at Laboure Junior College, Boston. She is pursuing an Associate in Science degree.

Ms. Ward is a 1969 graduate of Monsignor Ryan Memorial High School, and has also attended Massasoit Community College.

She is a Licensed Practical Nurse (LPN) at Long Island Hospital, Boston, and formerly worked as an LPN at Boston City Hospital.

There were hailstones in Boston and heavy rain in Plymouth but the skies were dry over Sohier Street, last Saturday night.

Undaunted by logistics and forecasts twelve families of east Sohier St., from Ripley Road to North Main Street, gathered to celebrate 'neighborliness' at their first annual end-of-summer block party.

The Ripleys, Marks, Pfaffmanns, Crehans, O'Connells, Lincolns, Bronsteins, Lynchs, Browns, Bartows, Whoriskeys and the Moes, new neighbors, were all there along with old neighbors, the Cuffs, and more neighbors, the Pratts, Youngs, Coxs, Sheltons, Whipples, Hendersons, Goods andRussells. Everyone from six months to at least 45 was there for games and a gourmet pot luck dinner.

Residents were somewhat publicity shy but an anonymous, undercover newsperson overheard a great many of them say that there was an undeniable spirit of neighborhood present that afternoon and the best they could wish for any other neighborhoods in town was the same sort of day.

Just around the corner from Sohier Street at the Osgood School, there was another very special celebration, recently. There was a clown complete with cymbals and balloons and a cake which had been smuggled in before school by the teachers and carefully decorated to match the guest of honor down to his blue eyes and curly locks. There were the students and staff and finally, there was Jack Creamer who really was surprised by the birthday gathering in his honor.

"May I just simply say 'thank you' because I'm very embarrassed," he said as he asked students to guess his age. (He also seemed very pleased when one student thoughtfully replied "29").

It was a time of fun for all but it was also a chance for students and staff at the Osgood School to show their principal that he was held in very high regard. Mr. Creamer's daughters Susan, Tracey, Lisa and Paula were also there to join in the festivities.

Joshua Legere celebrated his fifth birthday with friends, last Friday, and, according to his brother, Jason, feels "pretty good about being five."

Peter Anderson is well known in the area as a photographer and as an instructor at the South Shore Art Center. For those familiar with his work, there is yet another dimension of his talents to be discovered at the current exhibit of his miniatures at the center.

For Chinese food enthusiasts, the grand opening of the new KoKo Island Restaurant on Route 3A is now planned for December 10. A new entrance is planned which will be at the rear of the building which was formerly The Ground Round Restaurant.

Committee chairman often find that their responsibilities include not only the overall leadership and organizational work but also those items which, for lack of a better definition, can best be called the "nitty gritty."

Ask Judy Volungis, chairman of last Saturday's Septemberfest. It was for this very nitty griity, that Judy found herself last Friday rushing to meet the P&B bus. Arriving at the bus stop hoping that either she was early or the bus, late, she refused to ponder the consequences if neither were true.

At last, much to Judy's relief, the bus arrived and with it a very special package which was properly presented by a laughing driver who seemed to enjoy his unusual mission. Afterall, he probably doesn't receive many requests to deliver ten pounds of minced clams to a bus stop in Cohasset.

Judy's husband, Dan, had bought the clams at the Boston Fish Market and sent them on their way. And so, thanks to careful planning and the P&B, festival goers were able to enjoy a delicious clam chowder.

Peg Ramsey of Highland Avenue is justifiably proud of her son, Stephen, a 1979 graduate of Cohasset High School. Stephen, an inflight electronics technician in the Navy just took his first training flight to Japan, Alaska and Hawaii. Peg says he especially enjoyed spending two days in Japan where he told her the people are really friendly.

Stephen's duties include radar and communication. He has been assigned to an Orion plane used to tract subs and has extensive survival training.

Old Colony scouts honor Murray

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, has been selected as the 1981 recipient of the Old Colony Council, Boy Scouts of America Distinguished Citizens Award, reports Warren Noble, award committee chairman.

"Because of her integrity, her humanitarianism, her dedication to youth, the elderly, and all those in between, Old Colony Council felt she was deserving of this award," said Noble.

Rep. Murray will be honored at a dinner on Nov. 5, at Lantana in Randolph.

Local residents may obtain tickets from Warren Noble or Ticket Chairman Greg Hall, of DeWolfe Realtors, Greg Hall Division.

Last years' recipient was State Rep. Elizabeth Metayer, who received the award at a similar dinner.

In other years, William H. Sullivan, Jr., Chris Tsaganis, and Ralph Tedeschi were also honored by the Boy Scouts.

Crash hurts Cohasset man

An early Friday morning two-car accident in Hingham has left two Hingham Police Department detectives and a Cohasset man injured.

Mark Prestoy, 28, of 589 Jerusalem Rd., Cohasset, was listed in fair to good condition at South Shore Hospital Tuesday. He is being treated for multiple internal injuries.

Detectives Frank Allegra, 48, and Joseph Mayer, 36, were treated and released Friday morning. Mayer, said Hingham police, suffered a slight concussion, sprained neck, knee and bruises.

Allegra suffered facial injuries, contusions and a fractured nose. Both detectives will be out, "until further notice," said Hingham Police Captain William Schmitt.

The woman needed help

By Patricia Desmond

The woman sounded angry.

I'd heard voices like her's before. People who think newspapers can solve the problems of the world. The sad thing is that we (the journalistic world) would like to but the best we can do is point out the problems and hope a light shining on injustice, inhumanity, corruption or illogic will be the start of a solution.

She had just called Alcoholics Anonymous, trying to find a meeting in Cohasset.

She said she decided she was ready to go. She hadn't been able to get the information. She wanted to know why the Mariner didn't publish that sort of information.

I knew a little about A.A., having done articles years past on Al-Anon. Al-Anon welcomes that sort of media coverage. A.A. doesn't. I don't understand the theory but the thought is that for A.A. to be effective the alcoholic has to have made a strong determination on his or her own.

I told the woman I would try to get the meeting night and time and I asked her to call back or give me her number.

"I think they should do more to help you," she said.

She didn't tell me much about her background. She said she had just decided she is an alcoholic and she wanted help deciding what to do from there.

"It isn't like I want to keep drinking.

"I thought they'd at least have a hotline or something. An answering service. I had to expose myself to an answering service. Not just a regular one but one with an operator too busy to get the information."

She sounded like she was crying.

"It's hard enough."

Through her complaints, the woman explained that she doesn't drive. She lost her license long ago. She can't get out of town to attend meetings of any kind without using public transportation or inconveniencing a friend.

She isn't ready to tell anyone she knows she's an alcoholic so that lets a friend out.

She looked up the A.A. number in the phone book.

Someone answered the Quincy number 2726. She began her question and was put on hold. More than a moment later she got a chance to finish her question.

"We go by days. You want the meeting for tonight." she quoted the operator. She explained again.

"We don't go by cities. You have to hold on for a minute, we're busy," she quoted again.

The woman said she waited for what she termed quite a while before she hung up, feeling angry.

I told her again I thought I could find the meeting time and place in a few minutes. She said she'd call me back in half an hour. She never did.

(A.A. meets Monday night at 8:30 p.m. at First Parish Church parish house.)

Editorial

Roaming dogs

The time has come for us to be considerate in the care and leashing of our dogs.

The dog officer admits he doesn't have the budget to pick up all the dogs roaming loose through quiet residential neighborhoods, on the town ways and in public parks.

The dogs don't belong there. Henry Ainslie, chairman of the board of selectmen, points out the town bylaw, which is an animal control law rather than a leash law, prohibits dogs from wandering on people's property without their permission.

Page Liberty, whose two goats were killed while inside an area blocked off with an electrified fence on his property, hadn't given any dogs permission to be on his land. Little good it did him.

It could have been a child, some upset people say. Selectmen viewing the photographs of the remains of the goat talked over the problems of enforcing the dog control law.

Even if Richard Yocum, the dog officer, were willing to work 12 hours a day, mounting up debts at the private kennel that charges the town for boarding impounded dogs that are not redeemed by their owners, he couldn't handle the job.

The only way our community will ever be protected from packs of dogs, now seen as a problem, and from the damage dogs can do is if each dog owner takes responsibility for his or her pet.

Accepting a pet means accepting a whole parcel of duties and cares. The obvious problems of pet ownership, like providing a place for the animal when the family is on vacation, food, water, and veterinarians should be enough to keep many people out of the field of pethood.

There are more responsibilities we as decent neighbors should accept in a society with homes collected in any form of community.

They include:

—Making sure the animal causes no harm to others. Mail carriers and bicycle riders should not be the exceptions. Any dog that runs after joggers, bicyclists or other moving people should be permanently restrained before the insurance company cancels the dog bite clause on a homeowners policy. (Which happens automatically after a dog bite claim, as far as we can tell, with all insurance companies.)

—Cleaning up the dog whatever-your-euphemism-is-for-it especially when it lands off your property.

—Quieting the dog when chained outside if he's serenading the neighborhood.

—Licensing the pet, partly in case all these precautions fails and the dog officer should walk off with him.

There are between 700 and 800 licensed dogs in town today. The most conservative guess of dog officials is that this means about half are licensed.

King wants support for casino posture

(Editor's Note: The Mariner opposes Casino Gambling.)

To the Editor:

As you doubtlessly know by now, Governor King has taken his stand on casino gambling. He is, in no uncertain terms, opposed to them. "Over my dead body," is how he so plainly put it in a weekend interview with the Boston Herald American.

This letter is written to urge your support, editorially, for the Governor's position and point of view. From our perspective here in the press office, where dozens of media inquiries come in daily, it would appear casino gambling rates among the top two or three issues of interest in the state. The long term impact of what casino gambling would mean is evident.

As you can see from the attached press release, the Governor's opposition is based on the predictable — all too predictable — social consequences that would follow the casinos. Violent crime, organized crime, prostitution, family instability, drug abuse and alcoholism — all seem to be among the seamy bedfellows of casino gambling. The Governor hopes the state's opinion shapers — the people who write newspaper, radio and television editorials — see it that way, too.

We also think the Governor's position should be aligned, side by side, with the critical misconception that he is "nothing but a bottom line financial man." The Governor doesn't care what casinos might mean for the state's tax coffers; the social consequences, in this case, would be far greater than anything Massachusetts might generate in taxes.

We appreciate your attention and consideration on this matter. If our office can be of any assistance, for this or any other possible editorial, please don't hesitate to call us. Our phone number is (617) 727-2759.

Letters

Praises Mariner anti-casino stance

To the Editor:

I personally want to thank you and your staff for the excellent coverage published in the Mariner newspapers on Casino Gambling.

You have been most generous in your coverage of this very controversial issue, and you have extended a great service to the readers in this area.

With the strong statement issued by the Governor this week against Casinos, I feel we have a little "breathing space," but the controversy is still very much alive.

I do want to thank you again — for the editorials, press releases, and letters published — all which served to inform the public (a necessary tool in our efforts)!!!

Maria Plante
Cohasset

Applauding the selectmen

To the Editor:

I applaud the Cohasset Selectmen for their recent decision to appoint a cable television advisory committee. I trust they will expedite the appointing of such a committee, and in moving forward with the cable TV licensing process.

The Selectmen should also be commended for voting to require psychological examinations for police department candidates. If they will only take the same positive approach to the issue of appointing permanent intermittent police officers....

What are the priorities of the Selectmen? Have they set any overall goals for the town? It is my feeling, as it is the opinion of many others in Cohasset, that the Selectmen could be more effective if they would consider the whole picture, and their place in it.

Sincerely,
John K. McNabb, Jr.

Scholarship forms available in Dec.

State Sen. Allan McKinnon (D-Norfolk and Plymouth) announced this week that the Massachusetts State Board of Higher Education scholarship forms for secondary schools and colleges will be available in December.

Sen. McKinnon noted that the format and procedure of this year's applications will be the same as that of previous years.

McKinnon said, "I'm happy to know that last year, with partial financial assistance from the federal government, approximately 27,000 awards totaling over $17 million were distributed to Massachusetts residents."

Students who are interested in obtaining the required forms, or those who have any questions regarding state scholarships, may contact Senator McKinnon's office at the State House by calling 722-1646.

Rocky was all wet but still a splash

Rocky Laugelle created quite a splash at the Septemberfest on the Common.

In fact he created several dozen splashes.

Rocky, who is up for re-election this year, was one of the chief dunkees at the weekend Septemberfest. Rain dampened the atmosphere.

Rocky probably didn't notice after one or two immersions.

The surprize was that the festival continued on to Sunday. Better weather helped the second day festival.

One of the thrills of the daywas the super special Sesame Street frosted cakes raffled along with a table loaded with more usual chance-taking items.

Crafts people were covered in town hall during the Saturday rain. Exquisite hand-made items were available from quilts that sold for numbers in the three figures to inexpensive jewelry.

It was a great success despite the weather according to festival chairman Judy Volungis.

"The weather somehow never seems to cooperate," says Judy, "but the enthusiasm of the workers and festival goers more than made up for the wind and rain." The event was a major fundraiser for the Cohasset Community Center and, according to Judy, brought in close to $2,000. Being able to extend it an extra day was a big help, she adds.

Two new events, this year, which were both very popular were the Coke robot and the dunking booth. With the improvement in the weather on Sunday it was difficult to say who was having a better time — the dunkers or the dunkees.

Chairman of the various committees were: Dan Volungis, food; Nancy and John Kinchla, games; Dee DeSantis, posters; Laura Doherty, publicity; Baked goods, Paula Almeida; Cotton Candy, Lee Jenkins; Dunking Booth, John and Winnie Kuhn; Flea Market, Mimi Aaronson; Raffle, Rosemarie Mercurio and Jan Ditmar; Face Painting, Sandy Putnam; Refreshments, Kathy and Gary Stevens; Boats, Ray Kasperowicz; White Elephant Table, Helen Fries and Refreshments, Kathy and Gary Stevens.

Attractive and useful prizes were donated by local merchants for the center's raffle.

Vicious dogs in Beechwood ...

paid by the owner if the dog is reclaimed. If the owner does not come forward, the dog is put to sleep in 10 days. Each unclaimed dog costs the town $44, Yocum said.

On the goat incident, he believes the situation was caused by animal instincts. The goats were kept in an electrified enclosure the dogs managed to break through.

Saturday during the Septemberfest, Yocum was called to take away a dog nipping at the pony giving rides to children. The dog had grabbed one child's arm before Yocum arrived. Skin on the child's arm was not broken.

If the transportation fee were adopted, Yocum expects his budget would turn money over the town. In Hingham and Hull where transportation fees are used over $10,000 reverts to the town.

Yocum says there are some dogs that cause most of the problems.

"I find most of the dogs I pick up are repeat offenders," he said. There have been other livestock killings in recent weeks. Rabbits are the usual prey.

Pratt reading program a success

Big Bird has all his feathers — thanks to the enthusiastic response of Cohasset young people to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library's summer reading program.

As each participant read 10 books a feather with the student's name attached was added to the 12 foot high yellow bird. One-hundred-five participants earned feathers for a grand total of 1,910 books.

Certificates of reading achievement were presented for each 10 books read and 67 readers were awarded a paperback book of his or her choice for reading a minimum of 20 books. These paperbacks were purchased by the Friends of the Library especially for the summer reading program.

The candidate whirls into Cohasset

By John McNabb

Former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, on a whirlwind tour of fundraisers on the South Shore, spoke of the need for responsible leadership in the Governor's Office, and criticized Governor Edward King.

"There is no excuse for what has been happening," said Dukakis, who explained that with all the talented people who live in this state, it should have been possible for King to hire more competent people to serve in state government.

"If there is one single thing that distinguishes a good administration from a bad one," said Dukakis, "it is the people you pick." He described the present administration as having "a fiasco a week," and asked the audience at a Cohasset fundraiser: "Why can't we have a Governor who can even determine how much an auto inspection sticker costs?"

On Saturday, Sept. 19, Dukakis attended fundraisers in Weymouth, Cohasset, and Hanover, to raise money for his campaign and to kickoff his South Shore campaign.

He was introduced in Weymouth and Cohasset by Sen. Allan McKinnon, a strong supporter and close friend. McKinnon described Dukakis as "the most honest, capable man I've met in government." McKinnon, in discussing the King administration, criticized what he called a vacuum of leadership and said that "the can do administration can't."

Bill and Paula Golden of Quincy were present at each event to describe the upcoming campaign. The Goldens are coordinating the Dukakis campaign for the 54 towns in Norfolk and Plymouth County. Besides fundraising, they explained, the most important thing for Dukakis supporters to do now is to organize for the upcoming Democratic Nominating Convention.

For the first time since 1971, the Goldens explained, Democrats will hold a convention to nominate candidates for statewide office. The 1982 convention, which will be held on May 22 in Springfield, is an important organizing effort for the Dukakis campaign, they said.

Caucuses, which can be attended by everyone enrolled as a Democrat by the end of this year, will be held in every city and town on Saturday, Feb. 6. The Dukakis' campaign will be identifying all Democrats and Independents, educating them about the convention and the Dukakis campaign, and will make every effort to win every possible convention delegate, explained Bill Golden.

Dukakis explained that he expected this primary campaign to cost from $1 million to $1.5 million, more than three-and-one half times what his 1974 primary cost. He said the campaign expects to spend $600,000 in TV and radio time. "It will not be an easy campaign," said Dukakis, "no matter what the polls say right now."

The Cohasset fundraiser, attended by nearly 50 people, was held at the Jerusalem Road home of James and Mary Richard. The $50 a person event raised over $2,000 for the Dukakis campaign, and featured a clambake with lobsters donated by and prepared by Dana Salvador of Sea Side Lobstering of Plymouth.

Attending the Cohasset clambake were Cohasset Democratic Town Committee Chairman Donna McGee, Hingham Selectman Eugene Bickford, and Marshfield Selectwoman Sheila Gagnon, as well as other prominent citizens from the South Shore.

Color and composition course

Betty Kohlberg, associate professor of painting and drawing at Massachusetts College of Art, will be teaching a Color and Composition Workshop this fall at the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset for beginning, intermediate and advanced students.

This one-day workshop will take place Saturday, Sept. 26 from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and will consist of working with one project on color and composition on the two-dimensional surface.

The class will start with an intellectual approach and will end with an intuitive approach and modern techniques will be explored.

Ms. Kohlberg, who received her BFA from Massachusetts College of Art and her MFA from Tufts University, has exhibited in solo and group shows in Boston and New York and her work is in private and corporate collections in Boston, New York, Georgia and elsewhere.

Thirteen unlucky for Skippers

By Rob Tis

Thirteen proved to be a very unlucky number for the Cohasset Skippers this week. On Saturday the boys' soccer team lost to powerhouse Duxbury 13-0.

On Sunday the football team, after being postponed for a day because of rain, lost a non-league game to Marshfield, 13-7.

Marshfield is a very big town and the Skippers have nothing to be ashamed of. In fact the Skippers made more first downs and rushed for 10 more yards than the Rams.

The Skipper air game was a little slow. Kevin Dooley completed four of 16 for 20 yards. Still the Skippers looked to be dominating the game. Bad breaks were the thorn in the paw for Cohasset. They fumbled four times and Marshfield recovered twice, both at crucial points in the game.

The Skippers stuck with 11, but at the end of the 3rd quarter they found themselves down by 13. The hardnosed Skippers still kept fighting. They took advantage of the short punt and worked their way in to the 10 yard line.

From here Dooley hit Joe Becker on the two and he fell over the line for the TD. Paul Buckley then gave the ball a ride through the goalposts for the extra point and the Skippers final tally.

The football team has its home opener against Hanover. I hope to see everyone up at Milliken Field to give our team some support.

Noering named Outstanding Young Man

The Board of Advisors for the Outstanding Young Men of America Awards Program announced that Richard Noering of Cohasset has been selected for inclusion in the 1981 edition of Outstanding Young Men of America.

These men were selected from nominations received from Senators, Congressmen, Governors, Mayors, State Legislators, University and College Presidents and Deans as well as various civic groups, including the United States Jaycees which also endorses the Outstanding Young Men of America program.

In every community there are young men working diligently to make their cities, as well as their country, better places in which to live. These men, having distinguished themselves in one or more fields of endeavor, are outstanding and deserve to be recognized for their achievements. The criteria for selection include a man's voluntary service to community, professional leadership, academic achievement, business advancement, cultural accomplishments and civic and political participation.

The men, along with fellow Outstanding Young Men throughout North America will be featured in this prestigious annual awards publication.

Victory and goals are sweet as this unidentified Cohasset Girls' Soccer Team member jumps for joy as the ball enters the Hanover net.

NOW meets on legislation Sept. 24

By Peg Norris
Plymouth County NOW

THURSDAY, SEPT. 24 — Welcome to the first meeting of the NOW year. Beth Broderson, Massachusetts NOW Legislative Chair, will bring us up to date on pending Beacon Hill legislation having to do with women's issues. Last spring the Massachusetts Legislature voted overwhelmingly to pass a Human Life Amendment. Concurrently, most Massachusetts NOW sponsored bills, which concerned sexual harassment, displaced homemakers, sexual preference, domestic violence, and DES screening, were stalled or killed in committee.

The Legislature is reconvening after a summer recess. NOW members will make a much more forceful and insistent presence on Beacon Hill this fall. At a time when progress for women to date is being systematically eroded in Congress, our role in holding the line against reaction here at home becomes much more important.

Come and hear Beth tell us how it can be done and what each one of us can do to generate support for Massachusetts NOW legislation and opposition to regressive measures.

The meeting will be held at the Cushing Room of the Rockland Trust Co., Cohasset, which is located on 3A, in the Cushing Plaza behind the A&P. The doors will be open at 7:30 p.m. for coffee and conversation, the program will begin at 8 p.m.

OCTOBER SEMINAR — A unique three evening seminar entitled "Tools for Personal Growth" will be presented by the Chapter on Thursday, October 15, 22 and 29 from 8 to 10. Coffee, refreshments and discussion at 7:30 p.m. The sessions will be held at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 No. Main St., Cohasset.

The presentation will include the subjects of assertive training, communication skills, parenting, divorce and methods of coping with stress. The format will be informal, including experiential exercises. Three experienced counselors will lead the sessions. Ms. de Miranda is a psychotherapist specializing in a woman's prespective. Ms. Traub is an educator and consultant in parenting skills. Ms. Buter-Thompson is in family practice with Dr. Tod Forman, providing instruction and practice in stress management techniques.

Members and friends may attend any one of the sessions, or the whole series. There will be a $2 charge for each session, to help cover expenses.

NOV. 19 MEETING — Poetry reading at the home of Ruth Spencer, 462 Main St., Hingham, at 7:30 p.m. You may participate in any one of three ways — read your own poetry, read poems of others which you enjoy, or simply be a listener.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE — Deanna Hebert, our newly elected president, wants to remind us that this year is the 10th anniversary of Plymouth County NOW. She and other members of the Executive Board have been talking about plans to celebrate this occasion. One plan is to have a dinner next spring to honor area women who have worked to further women's issues. Deanna is looking for suggestions and would like you to be thinking about such women whom we might recognize. She is also interested in learning more about the early days of the chapter from charter members.

CHAPTER NEWS — Our May yard sale realized $190. Many thanks to all those who contributed and to those who worked on the sale.

The chapter is now receiving its share of your annual dues from the National NOW office under the new central dues collection plan. A number of members-at-large have also become members of Plymouth County NOW, and we welcome them to the chapter.

This summer the Executive Board sent a check to DOVE, the Quincy based shelter for battered women, which has been seeking funds to purchase a house, since it had to vacate its previous shelter situated on the grounds of the Quincy Hospital.

Luffing every minute of it

By Regina Schultz

It was May 24th in '81
And "tune-up time" had just begun

Kasperowicz, Chapman, Porter, Ellis, and Young
Were sanding and hauling to get the job done.

Goedecke, Smith, Croninger, and Henry
Reviewed all their tactics and tested their memory.

"Now where were those markers — A, D, C & O Broad reach or beating — what makes a boat go?"

Meanwhile the Rookies; Schultz, Conway, and Horn,
Viewed with misgiving their venture-newborn.

"Oh woe to us all — we are all deep in hock
And the bloody old boat is still in dry dock!"

"How will we remember — starboard or port?
And the Yacht Racing Rules we know from naught."

Well, valor undaunted, the three men in the tub
Proceeded to name her "Rub-A-Dub-Dub."

She took her place at the head of the string
Of illustrious crafts whose praises we sing.

On Ruby, on Skyelark
On Merry Jane, and Summer Squash

On Blue Sails and Skean Dirk,
And Rub-A-Dub-Dub, by gosh!

When it's all said and done — it was understood
Among racing circuits, It Scot to be Good!

Then Captain, Rob Henry, announced with real pride
That fleet 105 would sail the next tide.

The Committee Boat stationed itself at Mark K
And the racing season was underway.

"You're barging" — "I protest!"
"You're wasting your time;
Those Mickey Mouse protests ain't worth a dime!"

"Mast abeam," — "Buoy space"
"Luffing rights," — "Figure eights"
Doin' 360's is really just great!

'Follow the Blue Sails"
"Head up," — "Fall off fast!"
"Hike opt," — "Jib in"
"Let go of the mast!"

Where is Bob going? He's nearly a dot!
Look at Porter and Ellis — they really are hot!

They're giving old Blue Sails a run for the money,
And they're gaining so fast that Pete don't think it's funny!

But who is that now who is laying the mark?
Why, cirus and nimbus, it's Bob Smith's Skyelark!

Now, Terry comes on — he's got everyone covered
As round the "D" mark the boats are all hovered.

"We'll push all those boats right off the "D" scene We'll squash them all — you'll see what I mean!"

And just where is that Ruby cat?
Her fur is up; Ray's waving his hat!

"Passing gear!" he yowls as he eats up the course.
He sits back — they're planking — this won't be his loss!

Davenport tugs on the spinnaker sheets
The spinnaker blossoms — the picture's complete.

They're off now and running at the head of the pack
Everyone thinks "It must be time to tack..."

Then, out of nowhere comes a gust of such force
That it blows the five leaders away off their course.

Cumulus nimbus are piled up high
And thunder and lightning lash out from the sky.

Then, on come Pete G, and Rub-A-Dub-Dub
See, David and Robert pull on their gloves.

With cunning and craft, the three boats set their course
And they tighten the boom vang like reins on a horse.

"Here is our chance," they all seem to know "Who says it's foul weather? It's our chance to go!

They've all found themselves, now at the head of the pack —
They're beaming, they're reaching, they're not looking back!

Then, lo and behold the "E" mark is in sight —
(The crews are all grateful, for it is nearly night!)

The judge on the boat has his eyes bulging wide —
His slicker falls back as he grabs for the side.

His boat gives a lurch as it swells from the force
Of eight Flying Scots all ending the course — AT ONCE.

He gives the horn one solitary long blast
And still his expression is completely aghast.

"This," says Bob D. "is the scorer's delight."
"I'll just write 'one for all' tonight!"

And so the season had begun —
The wonderful season of '81.

For fifteen weekends they mustered their crew
To see what now their boats would do.

From roaring southwesterlies and four-foot high seas
To doldrums and luffing, and beers, if you please.

They hoisted with halyards; they tacked and they jibed.
They lay all the marks and weathered the tides.

They let out the main; they took up the slack
They picked up their moorings and said, "Where's the tack?"

For weekends on end the Mariners sailed
Through Cohasset's summer until it paled...

But they knew the secret that no landlubbers knew —
It would hold them together until '82 —

"Next year we'll get that jib in tighter — Ketch yawl, schooner or lighter!"

Communications Councils are link between school & home

By Karin Bartow

Fall is the season for committments and before you reach your quota, consider the Cohasset Communications Councils. They're free, informative, beneficial to many and even some times, fun!

The Councils are representative parent groups serving the Joseph Osgood, Deer Hill, Junior and Senior High Schools. Meetings are monthly on Wednesday's (beginning in October) with their respective principals. Their purpose is to serve as an information link between school and home.

Parents on the councils become better informed about school issues while becoming better acquainted with the administration and staff. Meetings, however, and council sponsored activities and projects, are open to any parent. The "business" of each meeting usually centers around issues of concern within the schools. Parents and principals exchange ideas, make suggestions and discuss school programs and problems.

Each council is composed of three to five members for each grade level. Their bylaws provide for a consecutive two-year term (not necessarily on the same school council), ensuring broader participation. Each year, therefore, at least half of the council membership is retired. Those who've served on a council may be eligible again after a year's absence. Anyone not serving as a council member may, however, serve on a sub-committee.

Parent education programs are often presented at individual council meetings. Last year at Osgood meetings, John O'Brien of South Shore Counseling spoke about stress at holiday time, Marilyn Powers, Osgood reading specialist, discussed her work and Larry Lieberman, psychologist and consultant to the schools, talked about the problems associated with raising elementary school age children. The Deer Hill council invited the art and gym teachers to their meetings and a representative of SRA Testing Services.

The councils also sponsor activities that they deem appropriate and while they do not have treasuries, they fund raise from time to time to pay for specific activities. The Osgood council sponsored enrichment programs last year that included a local author/ illustrator and the Children Museum Kit on the handicapped. They also purchased gym equipment and set up a trust fund for field trip scholarships. Future plans call for help in funding an outdoor nature study center at the school.

Council meetings

Osgood School, meets the 1st Wednesday, at First Parish House, co-chairmen, Pat Baird, 383-6997, and Martha Equi, 383-0461.

Deer Hill School, meets the 3rd Wednesday, at First Parish House, co-chairmen, Marj Izzo, 383-6742, and Dottie Andrade, 383-6357.

Junior High School, meets the 2nd Wednesday, at Jr./Sr. High School, co-chairmen, Jane Nussdorfer, 383-1753, and Carolyn Songer, 383-0986.

Senior High School, meets the 2nd Wednesday, at the Jr./Sr. High School, co-chairmen, Nancy Sandell, 383-0486, and Kate D'Onofrio, 383-0828.

Steering Committee, meets the 4th Wednesday, at Superintendent's Office, chairman, Mary Lou Studds, 383-6956.

The Deer Hill council has raised scholarship money to help fifth grade students attend Outdoor School. Both councils are supporting the financial and organizational needs of a poet-in-residence program for one month in each of the two schools this year. The Deer Hill council's arts committee has brought a local artist to the school once a month throughout the past several years.

All councils help coordinate open houses in their respective schools and organize parent volunteers in the schools, whose assistance becomes more vital each year.

Many issues of concern among parents have become off-shoot projects of the councils. The junior/senior council was instrumental in seeing a health education program and the Dave Toma alcohol and drug abuse program realized in the schools last year. They also lobbied successfully for a seventh grade representative on the student council. This year the junior and senior high councils have separated and each group is hoping to see more parents involved.

A very valuable source of information on school matters and policies is the Steering Committee of the four councils which meets monthly with the superintendent. Each council has a permanent representative to the steering committee and at least one of each co-chairman attends; meetings are open to the public.

This committee coordinates the activities of each council and serves as a vehicle for the exchange of ideas. Monthly speakers have included the Metco coordinator Philip Burrows, health coordinator Mike Gill, police chief John DeBassio, and assistant to the superintendent Stephen Hart.

Through the steering committee the councils have strengthened many projects, such as the development of a drug and alcohol policy.

The councils are an appropriate and effective clearing house for parents' concerns, questions and suggestions regarding the Cohasset school system. Involvement on a council is a great way to spend a Wednesday morning!

Liquor law violations

For the second time in the space of two months the selectmen face possible reprimand of a local liquor store over sale to a minor.

Officials can't remember when they've come across this problem in the past.

Of course there was a time when the Alcohol Beverage Control Commission brought its own case against a liquor store in town. That was handled by the state, not by selectmen.

Scott Liquors on South Main Street sold a case of beer to a 17-year-old last month. No one disputes that. What was argued during a hearing before the selectmen last week was whether the sale involved negligence on the part of the store clerk.

The boy was not asked for identification the night he was stopped by Patrolman David Pomarico outside the liquor store, but the store manager says the boy had provided suitable identification in the past.

The selectmen took the matter under advisement. It will be discussed at the meeting tonight (Wednesday) at town hall.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said after the close of the regular meeting last week that the board needs the help of merchants to stop teenage drinking.

"It's a problem," she said.

The other case involving sale of alcohol to a minor resulted in the one-day suspension of the license.

Enjoy a winter ski week in the Austrian Alps

Bad Gastein! Sunshine! Ski-shine!

This year Buckles & Boards presents a vacation in the wintersport-center of Bad Gastein, Austria. Located in the midst of dramatic Alpine scenery, this major ski resort and health spa is known world-wide for International ski competition. Our 9 day, 8 night ski trip will include air & land transportation from Boston, hotel room & meals at the five-star deluxe Park Hotel Bellevue located on the mountain side at this chic mountain resort. Also, one night in Vienna, Austria!!

With 31 lifts, 104 miles of ski runs and three ski areas, beginners to experts are offered a variety of terrain. One can ski seven miles to the village of Angertal, ski the back bowls or ride up to 9,000 feet for powder skiing. Helicopter skiing is also available. There are 14 mountain restaurants and stuberls for your resting and sun-bathing pleasures during a busy ski day.

Apres ski includes a host of activities. The deluxe Park Hotel Bellevue has its own inside thermal water swimming pool. Nearby is an outdoor pool, open year round, fed by Bad Gastein's famous hot springs. Imagine swimming outdoors on a February afternoon! Arrive home with a suntan. Activities range from visiting beer kellers and Tyrolean wine taverns to discos, elegant nightclubs and a casino. Shopping is plentiful in Bad Gastein.

One can also visit the old section of Bad Gastein to admire the spires of the ages-old parish church. Originally settled 2,000 years ago, the Romans enjoyed the hot spring waters here for their pleasures and cures. Even in the Middle Ages small inns and bathhouses lined the breath-taking Gastein Valley. Throughout many centuries gold was mined in this valley. The outstanding Madonna with Holy Child, constructed around 1500, is a fine example of local gold in the Parish church. Small castles along the mountainsides are reminders of life during the days of yore. Quite a contrast to the helicoper skiing of the nearby Schareck glacier!

Cohasset Mariner

vol. III, no. 52 | wednesday, september 30, 1981 | 25 cents

Corrina Minner, 7, of Bailey Road, shows the fruits of her labor. The pumpkins, she planted in June, have grown to be 48 inches around. (Derr photo)

Federal cuts dampen hopes for new Cohasset sewer plant

The Selectmen will find out tonight (Wednesday) what's happening to halt the flow of sewage into the harbor.

The town has been under court order for more than a year to move towards expansion of its waste water treatment system. So far the state attorney general's office has gone along with the speed — or lack of it — involved in the process.

But now the sewer commissioners wonder whether the town should give up its plan to build a new treatment facility, with an estimated cost of $12 million, since the new wave of federal budget cuts makes the planned for grant a matter of conjecture.

The town is not ready to even apply for construction funds at this time. Joseph Gwinn of the commission went over the problems with members of the advisory board last week.

The town would be expected to come up with somewhere in the neighborhood of $160,000 to proceed with the designing of plans.

Jan Daggett told town meeting last spring the commission was concerned about the possibility of moving ahead with the plans and then finding that there would be no federal funds available for construction.

Officials of the federal Environmental Protection Agency say that as far as they are concerned Cohasset would be an appropriate place for federal money to be used.

The present sewer plant on Elm Street is capable of processing about one-fifth of the wastewater that now passes through it.

Because of the problems, there has been a ban on any additions to the town's sewer system.

Arthur Clark, the Selectmen's executive secretary, said he believes the court would have to be lenient if the town can't proceed with its plans due to lack of funds.

The President's original budget for the 1982 fiscal year, which begins tomorrow, had no funds available for sewer construction. Under the latest budget, there is $95 million allocated for sewer grants in Massachusetts, state officials say.

That's less than half the amount available last year.

Local officials are worried about next year's allocation since the design stage will take some time.

The present sewer plant could be rehauled for about $1 million and expanded.

Lights out for 250 street lights

By Donna Cogliano

Beware of the oversized bumble bee. This species can be spotted on street light lamps to be shut off by the town.

About a fourth of the street lights will be affected.

To eliminate any confusion for residents as to whether a street light is supposed to be on or off, alternating thick colored strips of yellow and black will be taped to those lamps getting the axe.

Selectmen voted last Wednesday night to disconnect, or dim about 260 street lights throughout the town. The finalized list of cuts, aimed at staying within the new budget of $35,275, was approved 2 to 0 with Selectman Rocky Laugelle abstaining because of his job with Eastern Edison Co.

About 250 street lights will be turned off and 15 others dimmed. Originally Selectmen estimated the shutoff or dimming of 360 street lights.

The total of 265 cutbacks of street lights represents a $16,000 savings toward the town's new budget of $35,275. Projected costs for operating all 700 street lights for this fiscal year was $51,322.

Selectmen defended their street light cuts: "Now we are treating private ways the same as public ways," said Chairman Henry Ainslie. Private way residents made out much better the second time around.

CHS seniors opt for a musical

The senior class play will be a musical, performed next spring, according to the vote of a majority of the class members.

Beth Goff seems the likely candidate to coach the class play since Ron Emmons, drama coach and the other candidate for the position, has said he is only interested in a dramatic production.

Emmons' appointment was tabled by the school committee two weeks ago after controversy arose over the staging of the play.

The actual appointment of a director for the play must be confirmed by school committee vote next Monday. As of last Wednesday night, Mrs. Goff was the only candidate interested.

The dates — sometime in early April — and price of tickets is still to be determined. Casting will take place during the last two weeks in January, on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

It seems a large number of the seniors will participate in the production. The vote last week involved 70 to 100 students, according to the voters.

Rehearsals will be in February and March.

"It's an incredible group of kids," Mrs. Goff said. "They're a marvelous bunch."

Mrs. Goff said Emmons spoke with her after the

Gilman Churchill (95) loves Cohasset

By Patricia Desmond

'I don't let my mind go to sleep," T. Gilman Churchill said, sitting in the cool morning breeze on the patio of his home in the woodlands off Atlantic Avenue.

Mr. Churchill writes poetry, keeps up with baseball, visits with friends and, in general, gets about the community. He is one of the Cohasset's most respected elders. Today (Sept. 30) he turns 95.

He granted an interview to the Mariner to talk about the town and his upcoming birthday, although he worried about going overboard, as he put it.

It was a few minutes after 9 a.m. when Mariner Publisher David Cutler and I arrived at the Cohasset police station on Elm Street, where we had arranged to meet Mr. Churchill.

He was waiting.

His day had started hours before. He begins his morning with breakfast at the Log and Line at 6, ordering a dropped egg and toast with a little jelly.

If the weather's too bad for him to drive the distance, the Log and Line brings his breakfast to him.

Mr. Churchill led us to the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank in the Village where our interview officially began. Bank President Ed Mulvey seemed happy to greet one of the bank's former officers and directors. He took us into his office where Mr. Churchill discussed his early background.

He was an investment counselor with F.S. Mosley and Co. for more than 50 years. Today his savings are handled by trustees.

"I agree with what they're doing with it. It's in Treasury bonds," Mr. Churchill said when asked about his view of the stock market and investments today.

His money is in short term Treasury Bonds, now going for 16 1/4 percent.

"If U.S. government bonds aren't any good then we can all close up our doors."

Mr. Churchill has been involved with Pilgrim Cooperative for quite some time. He was appointed as a director of the bank in May, 1923 and served in that capacity for 48 years. He retired in 1971.

Cohasset's week

Town buildings tour

A new date has been set for the Selectmen's tour of town buildings. The board will conduct a two-day thorough inspection of buildings so that appropriations for repairs will be included in the town's new budget.

The tour date has been moved to Oct. 13 so that Selectmen may attend the annual Norfolk County Selectmen's meeting on Oct. 5.

Questionnaire for applicants

All persons requesting a position on the cable television advisory committee will receive a letter and questionnaire from the selectmen.

The questionnaire models Hingham's form and will be filled out and returned on a volunteer basis.

Selectmen are still accepting applications for the committee. By last Wednesday, they had eight official applicants.

Video request tabled

The Selectmen tabled a request for a video game license from the Greenhouse restaurant.

To obtain more information, Board members will discuss the application for license with the police and fire chiefs and Greenhouse manager.

Selectmen Mary Jane McArthur and Rocky Laugelle agreed with Chairman Henry Ainslie's concern that the board "should take a stand and punish those with unlicensed video machines in the future."

Clam flats closed

Selectmen voted to close the Whitehead clam flats to diggers for the Winter of 1982. Clam licenses will not be available for January and February of '82.

The Board based their decision on the recommendation of shellfish warden John Winters 3rd. The shutdown will allow clam beds to redevelop.

Liquor license suspension

In a unanimous vote, last Wednesday night, the selectmen agreed to suspend Scott Liquors' license for two days for selling a case of beer to a minor last month.

Chairman Henry Ainslie said, "They were negligent in my mind. In my opinion, it's a case of what the penalty should be and not a case of if they are guilty. It's their job to find out if a kid is underaged."

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur motioned for a three-day suspension. "I feel that we have a serious problem. We need the efforts of everybody, including the liquor establishments."

Selectman Rocky Laugelle argued for a one-day suspension since it was the first time a violation had come before the selectmen. "One day lets them know we mean business," he said.

Board members compromised and agreed to the two-day suspension of Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 7 and 8.

Town Clerk moves

The town clerk's office moved but not far.

The office on the third level of town hall is now in the location, across the hall, formerly occupied by Town Accountant William Signorelli. Mr. Signorelli's office and that of the town clerk were switched as a part of the town hall renovations underway.

Dump worker approved

The advisory committee last week approved a transfer of $2,933 from the reserve account to pay a part-time worker at the town dump.

The new worker will operate the recycling area, which had two temporary workers last summer through the youth corps.

Penn Central's price

Penn Central wants $130,000 for its right of way through town, the advisory committee learned last week.

The town has been talking about the purchase ever since the Old Colony Railroad abandoned the 26 acre strip. The land has been talked about for a right of way for sewer lines.

Early release day

Thursday, Oct. 8 will be an early release day in the Cohasset Public Schools. There will be no afternoon Kindergarten sessions and other students will be dismissed according to the following schedule:

Junior/Senior High School, 12:20 p.m.; Deer Hill School, 12:45; Joseph Osgood School, 12:55 p.m.

Lunch will be served in all of the schools.

This early release day has been authorized by the Cohasset School Committee in order to allow the staff at the Junior/Senior High School to work on the N.E.A.S.C. Evaluation and to allow the staff at the Deer Hill School and the Joseph Osgood School to participate in workshops dealing with the successful incorporation of poetry into the language arts curriculum.

Murray in hospital

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray is a patient at South Shore Hospital, Weymouth.

According to her office, the problem isn't serious. Her aide says she's not in intensive care.
She is in the hospital for tests, her office reports.

Officials of the hospital refuse any comment on her condition, referring calls to the family.

McKinnon hours

State Sen. Allan McKinnon (D-Norfolk and Plymouth) or a member of his staff will be available to speak to constituents Tuesday, Oct. 13, from 3 to 4 p.m. at the Town Hall.

Water shutoffs coming

The water department was scheduled to shut off several dozen consumers today due to nonpayment of water bills.

The first notices, threatening shut-off, went out at the start of the summer.

The group slated for shut off today (Wednesday) included more than 30 names at the start of the week.

There were about 40 notices mailed out. Only four or five paid the full bill. Small payments were made on some outstanding bills by others.

vote and congratulated her.

Jo-Ann Fichtner will help with choreography and Helen Ketchum will assist in directing.

Mrs. Goff said the seniors involved in winter sports will not be ruled out of the play, although rehearsals will begin while they're still playing.

"I'm available five days a week. I can work around the small amount of time used for the end of the season."

There are 141 seniors in this class. The class will make the actual selection of the play from three choices.

There are already a group of volunteers from the parents of class members to help with set design, voice coaching, etc.

"One parent called and volunteered to be both vocal coach and rehearsal pianist," Mrs. Goff said. "If enthusiasm is any measure of success, these kids are going to knock them dead in April."

Mrs. Goff is not a teacher in the school system. She's the mother of six. One of her sons is a member of the senior class.

Emmons, who does teach in the school system, told High School Principal Richard Streeter before the class vote that he would not be interested in directing a musical. He wanted to put on a dramatic production.

CROSS FROM ORIGINAL ST. ANTHONY'S — Joseph Laugelle poses with copper cross which topped the steeple of the old St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset from the time it was built in 1876 until the building was razed over a year ago. The cross has been presented to the Cohasset Historical Society by the Laugelle family.

Selectmen order golden retriever restrained

By Donna Cogliano

Dogs are the most constant problem on the Selectmen's agenda.

Last week it was the Briggs versus Hartwell case before the Selectmen.

The Board has ordered Cully, the Hartwell's golden retriever, restrained for the first offense incident of causing lacerations to Baron. Three stitches closed the wound and Mrs. Hartwell agreed to pay the $10 bill.

Baron, of 32 Linden Drive, is a mini-schnauzer and member of the Brigg's residence. Cully is 18 months old and lives with the Hartwells at 54 Rust Way.

Mary Hartwell made a statement and presented Selectmen with a petition last Wednesday night at Town Hall. Ten neighbors signed the petition, stating that Cully is not a violent or vicious dog.

The Briggs did not attend the meeting but forwarded a letter via Dog Officer Richard Yocum.

On July 18 Jeff Hartwell, 12, and his friend were walking with Cully, unleashed, when the tangle occured in the Brigg's yard.

Mrs. Hartwell told Selectmen, "If another incident ever happened, wounding another dog, we would get rid of Cully."

Dog Officer Yocum told the Board that he wouldn't want to run the risk of dealing with another incident.

Mrs. Hartwell objected to Yocum's stand and pointed out that he had never seen or met Cully. Yocum confirmed Mrs.Hartwell's statement that indeed he had never seen the dog.

While Selectmen search for more informtion about this matter, Cully has been ordered restrained as of September 11.

David Stover of Cohasset

He grooms the Rose Garden

By Susan Hurley

"He (President Reagan) is just another person to me now..."

David Stover has what can be considered a healthy, invigorating job working in the out-of-doors.

The only unusual aspect of David's job is where he works. The White House.

At 23 the former Cohasset resident is the youngest person ever to work as a chief horticulturist at the White House.

"I'm responsible for the whole grounds of the White House," David said. "I provide landscape site plans."

David's responsibilities also include helping plan the White House Christmas and Easter egg parties; state receptions for visiting dignitaries and White House functions in the Rose Garden or other areas of the White House grounds.

He works with a staff of 20 gardeners and horticulturists at the White House and recently finished supervising work on the President's patio near the White House pool.

Another recent project was the visit by Israeli Prime Minister Menachim Begin. David set up the flower arrangements and plants for the state dining room and elsewhere in the White House.

First Lady Nancy Reagan frequently gives suggestions for a particular color or flower she would like used.

"I receive a lot of suggestions from her," David said. "And I have met the President."

Heady stuff for someone who graduated from college in May.

Although he belonged to the Horticulture Club at Cohasset High School, David's interest in landscape architecture really began while at Unity College in Maine.

"I planned to be a park ranger," he said smiling. "I wanted to do something with art and design."

Landscape architecture seemed to fit his needs.

While at Unity, David majored in landscape architecture. He designed architectural plans for an amphitheatre which was constructed at Unity.

In May he began a four month internship at the White House which led to his being hired in August.

David now lives near Mount Vernon just outside of Washington, D.C. and has his office in the White House.

If a reception or address is being planned, David is responsible for making sure stages and tents are set up correctly. Where the public is involved it also means working with the Secret Service.

"You get used to them being around," he said.

David also works closely with White House staffers, presidential assistants and Chief Usher Rex Scouter.

"He'd tell you what colors Mrs. Reagan would like, suggest flowers.,, David is remarkably casual, even modest, about his working around celebrities and politicians.

Even running into the President is taken in stride.

"He's just another person to me now," David explained.

How much time does he have to prepare for something like a visiting head of state?

"About two weeks. It's not much time."

David is also involved in renovating the White House grounds. He has drawn a new master plan for sprucing up the grounds which has not been done since 1965.

Part of that job involved David in counting and labeling all 500 different species of trees on the grounds.

"The Rose Garden is being done over," David said. Rose garden, he added is really a misnomer because there are only six rose bushes there.

The garden however, is a traditional symbol in American politics and is used by the President for outdoor functions and speeches.

Crab apple trees have grown too large and are blocking sun from the roses. They may be removed and replaced with smaller trees.

All renovation work has to be done "little by little" David said because the garden "has to be available when needed" for Presidential functions.

While the Reagans were vacationing in California, a lot of renovation work was done to the garden and the patio.

Tourists are not allowed into the gardens except during special garden tours held twice a year.

Renovation may include removal of the ancient elm planted by President John Quincy Adams in 1926 which has been struck with Dutch Elm disease.

How does he feel about working at the White House?

"It's exciting to go to work," David said smiling.

Betty Maree was crowned queen of Bassing Beach for 1981 at a ceremony on Labor day.

Ben Curley was named King.

Seven University of New Hampshire students recently received Army ROTC scholarships through a national competition. There are 34 UNH students currently receiving Army scholarships which pay for tuition, books, fees and a monthly stipend of $100. The scholarships total $76,600.

Charles Coe of Cohasset won a three-year scholarship.

Each scholarship recipient must serve a minimum of four years on active duty as a commissioned officer and a minimum of two years as a commissioned officer in the Army Reserve or National Guard.

Chris Abbruzzese of 90 Old Pasture Rd. is a fullback on the 1981 Bowdoin College football team. A junior, he is a graduate of Deerfield Academy.

Chris Abbruzzese

Two local students were enrolled at Colby-Sawyer College in New London, N.H., this past weekend. Barbara Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leland Wilson, Forest Avenue, is enrolled in the business administration program. Gail Smart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Smart, Nichols Road, is enrolled in the liberal arts program.

Hingham Civic Music Theater's "Mame," scheduled for performances October 30, 31 and November 5, 6 and 7 will star Cohasset residents Jonathan deLima (young Patrick), Bruce Cameron (Beauregard Burnside), and Wayne Barcomb (Mr. Upson).

A rose is a rose is a rose — but a pumpkin grown by 7½ year old Corrina Minnar is definitely more than your ordinary garden variety pumpkin.

Corrina, assisted by her father, Peter Minnar, has been growing pumpkins for the past four years. Each year, her entry in a local pumpkin contest easily dwarfs all others.

This year, there was no contest and Corrina was disappointed because in her garden, right now, are not one but two winners. One of the pumpkins, alone, could be easily twice what Corrina weighs and has a circumference of four feet.

Corrina and her Dad are justifiably proud of the fruits of their labor. And, though the exact method of their success is a closely kept family secret, they will admit to using a special approach which has something to do with putting toothpicks in certain strategic areas. This, they explain, prevents the borer worm from reaching the pumpkin.

Never doubt the power of the press. After last week's article on the missing baby bunnies at the Community Center Nursery School and the careful planning that had gone into having them there for the students, when they began school, they were returned the day before school was to open.

Of course, they've been the main attraction, all week, both with the students and the staff and Mother Rabbit appears happy to have her family reunited.

"How I missed you," Danny Putnam, 4, seems to be saying. Danny was happy to see "Peter Rabbit" return after three bunnies were stolen from the Community Center Nursery School.

Best wishes to Patrick Leiser from the Mariner and his many friends for a speedy recovery.

The return of a writer

By Paul Steven Stone

Mornings were spent mixing business with life; helping dress and feed his daughters, sometimes stealing into his home office before the customary hour. The pulse of the family was always within reach, very often within assault range.

"I have to use the toilet!" his older daughter announced three or four times a day with an entrance that exploded into his routine, usually wounding the current trend of thought and threatening to transform the hinges on his office door into junkpile brass.

Phone calls had become a family affair, with serious business conversations often leavened with an unexpected Hullo-o-o! Hullo-o-o! that his one-and-a-half year old was practicing to priceless perfection on the extension.

He lived in a town that hadn't yet traded away the beauty and solemnitude of quiet mornings and lazy afternoons. Very often, the only movement to be seen outside his office window was that of birds, or trees nodding against a soft breeze.

He was a writer, this prince in a peaceable kingdom. For three and a half years he had worked at his craft away from the noise and confusion of city streets. There were no skyscrapers to punctuate his view of the ocean, no endless vista of desks and cubicles to remind him of the numbers this species of his had grown to. He was still connected to that world of multitudes by a phone, and by a simple red brick building into which he brought the manuscripts that would end up in the hands of strangers who would judge his work. In the end, there weren't enough strangers who said yes when he needed to hear that word, and not enough time to search out different strangers with different attitudes.

He was a writer of children's stories, textbook lessons, movie commentaries, newspaper essays — a writer. He saw himself pursuing a craft, and saw that his craft was evolving from his work like a statue set free under a sculptor's chisel.

This morning he left his home before his daughters had arisen. There was a stranger waiting to speak with him somewhere far away from the ocean, the breeze or the silence that each morning fed the spirit that sparked the words that clicked out from his typewriter. He had spoken to other strangers these last few weeks, each of whom possessed a desk that was waiting to be filled. This latest stranger perused the writer's wares and probed his personality with an indifference that was either natural to the stranger or inherent in the early hour.

There was a basic dishonesty that the writer had to confront in meeting with each of these strangers, but it was an honest dishonesty. There was something inside him that wanted to laugh at the idea of writing at a desk in someone else's office. It was in not laughing, in not confiding his ambivalence, that he felt as if he were wearing a mask. But the face on the mask spoke the truth. Something inside him that looked out at the world without blinking wanted a job, wanted to return to the security of a job writing advertising copy.

He was a writer; but before that he was a father and a husband. For three and a half years he had made the combination work; now it seemed as if the script needed serious changes.

He'll find a job somewhere, perhaps with that last stranger, just as likely with another. The words are inside him, and one way or another they will find release. He knows that. He knows that essence doesn't change; it survives desks and highways and skyscrapers. So it isn't a tragedy recorded here, merely another obstacle that rightly fell in someone's path.

But as he steps away from his typewriter to comfort the daughter who's crying because she wasn't permitted to take off her shirt he wonders what he'll ever find in a job that can replace such a tender fringe benefit.

CHS musical

Good luck to the senior class of CHS with their still to be selected senior class play.

The class voted last week to produce a musical with the thought that many class members would be able to participate in the staging.

That shows a great sense of school spirit and class unity. We applaud their decision and can't wait for a chance to applaud the production sometime in April.

School Principal Richard Streeter brought two views before the class, allowing both Beth Goff and Ron Emmons time to explain what would be involved in a musical or in a dramatic production.

The format was eminently fair, thanks to Mr. Streeter.

The class decided it wanted to do the extra work involved in presenting a musical. We hope it's everything they want it to be. We particularly hope they enjoy hamming it up as much as they expect.

Sewer options

The sewer commissioners are using a sensible approach to the problem with the over-taxed sewer plant.

The commission doesn't seem inclined to go ahead with the design of a new plant if the federal construction grant won't be available when the plans are complete.

The alternative is to update and expand the present plant and that seems like such a good idea we wonder why they didn't begin on that awhile ago.

Nevertheless, the path the commissioners are now on will probably save the town both time and money in the long run. It's a path they probably would be forced to take if, as they imagine, the federal government stops funding sewer construction.

Salute to Gilman Churchill

Congratulations to Gilman Churchill, venerable statesman around town.

Mr. Churchill turns 95 today (Wednesday).

The Cohasset Mariner is almost three-years-old. We thank him for granting us an interview. We wish him a wonderful birthday and continued good health.

Mr. Churchill served the town as selectman, advisory committee member and planning board member.

Moreover he serves as a continuing inspiration to all of us as he drives himself about the town, a symbol of wisdom and integrity.

Hull needs a casino badly

Letters

To the Editor:

We in Hull need a casino as badly as anyone in this state needs anything. If we have that casino two things will happen. We'll start to grow here, and, in so doing we'll attract opprotunities for tourism all over this state and yes, all over New England. Expand tourism for this state and that means jobs and, despite what Governor Kings says the state needs money. Please, no more taxes, no more human service cuts, no more laid off policemen, firemen or teachers. Don't close more libraries or restrict the use of parks. Don't institute higher license fees and hidden taxes. Take advantage of an industry that lies sleeping. Use it. Grow with it. Master it. Profit from it.

Don't live in fear of "what if?"

It's good business, good business for the whole state. We can not stand still because of the selfish interests of competitive business or the hysterical cries of those who try to regulate our morality for us.

We are free thinkers who have survived because of our desire for freedom and independence. Citizens of a state, yes a country, founded on the principles of home rule. We in Hull have voted overwhelmingly twice (once in a referendum in 1977 by 2 to 1, and secondly in town meeting in 1981 by 4 to 1) for a casino in our town.

There are those in government's high places who say: "No! You in Hull have no say in your destiny."

This should not be! We need you, our fellow citizens to say to your legislators: "This cannot be!"

We have a clear mandate from the people to fight for our people, as citizens fight, not as politicians. We must use all the fair and legal ammunition at our disposal to fight for the right of a town to rule itself, not be ruled by its neighbors. To do anything less would be to betray the fellow citizens of Hull, the plain citizens like yourselves, who have given their trust and support to the ballot box they believe in. The ballot box the blood of this country was shed to safeguard. The ballot box that as much as our flag, as much as the proud and defiant eagle symbolizes all this country stands for. We in Hull have spoken through that ballot box. Don't gag us! Let us be free to work for ourselves and the economy of the entire state!

If you start feeding birds, don't stop

To the Editor:

I would like to remind the many bird lovers in Cohasset that we are approaching the season of the year when many birds have a very important decision to make.

That is whether to begin the migration south which instinct tells them they should or whether to remain with us because they are being fed.

We can be very influential in this decision and what we do may make the difference between life and death for many of our feathered friends.

Many of us remember the serious problem which occured last winter, particularly during January and February when severe cold made it impossible for ducks to find food due to the freezing of bays and estuaries. Feeding was vital to their survival.

I know it is fun to feed the ducks and small birds but everyone who starts should think about the consequences. Feeding ducks now in an area such as Little Harbor may involve 10-20 "customers." As the weather gets colder and fresh water ponds freeze more ducks come to the coast and if feeding continues by the middle of December there may be over 200 hungry birds depending on handouts. Also remember that ducks in winter require a high protein diet such as whole corn — not white bread and Ritz crackers. The same reasoning applies to birds in general, however, most song birds are able to get along by visiting the many bird feeders available.

The important thing to remember is not to start a feeding program unless you are prepared to continue all winter with high protein food.

Justice O'Connor

To the Editor:

Now that the Senate has confirmed Sandra O'Connor's nomination to be a Supreme Court Justice, the time has come to reflect on the significance of this appointment. For the first time in 190 years, one of the brethren will be addressed as Madame Justice. For the first time in the history of the nation's highest court, justice will be sex-blind as well as color-blind. Justice O'Connor is a distinguished addition under any circumstances. She will interpret the law, but she has already made history.

[turn to page 9]

O'Connor appointment...

And is it too much to ask that the pride felt by millions of Americans in this historic moment include a word of gratitude for the man who made it possible? I believe that Ronald Reagan will take his place with Woodrow Wilson, who appointed the first Jew to the Court, and Lyndon Johnson, who elevated the first black. The President has already displayed a fine capacity for fooling the pundits and prognosticators. His sense of history — like Justice O'Connor's sense of justice — will serve all of us well in the years to come.

Howling dogs

To the Editor:

Have you ever had your blood curdled by a dog howling? There are few things as hard on the nerves and temper as listening to a dog howling, barking, whining or moaning for hours at a stretch.

Yet this is exactly what some dog owners put their neighbors through. This disturbance of the peace is the quickest and most common way to become a bad dog neighbor.

Please don't become a bad neighbor in your neighborhood.

Police union makes offer on dispute

The police union made the town an offer on the continuing controversy over a civilian dispatcher in the department.

The offer calls for the present employee in that position to continue on without performing functions as a dispatcher.

The union offer would change Yvette Rattenbury's job to that of a clerk/secretary.

The selectmen plan to meet in executive session this week with town counsel and a member of the personnel board to discuss the negotiations. A future negotiating session involving town officials and the union will be planned after that meeting.

A member of the staff of Plimoth Plantation will arrive dressed as "Desire Mintover," a 17th century citizen of Plimoth Colony and will demonstrate various skills and elements of everyday life for the sophomore class.

The year's first library braintwister was solved by sophomores Lisa Mercurio and Therese Lennon. The braintwister, posted on the library bulletin board, is a question that can be solved by using the library's reference books. Lisa and Therese answered the question, "What do Sherwood Forest and Monticello have in common?" (They are both homes of former presidents, Tyler and Jefferson.) The girls found the answer in the "Information Please Almanac" and won a gift certificate to the Strawberry Parfait for their efforts!

The current braintwister asks, "When was 3-D film invented? What was the first 3-D movie?" All students are invited to try and solve the puzzle and win a treat at the Strawberry Parfait.

John Leary, Guidance Counselor, will be attending the annual meeting of the National Association of College Admission Counselors in Philadelphia on Oct. 3. Mr. Leary is President of the New England Association of College Admissions and Counselors.

On Tuesday, Oct. 6, Cohasset High School will sponsor its annual Armed Forces Day. Representatives from each branch will be able to discuss the service academies, R.O.T.C. programs, and enlistment options. All students will have a chance to visit with each representative during the lunch period on Tuesday, Oct. 6.

ALUMNI NEWS

Eugene T. Price, a graduate of Cohasset High School and class of 1982 at Bowdoin College, was just elected vice chairman of the Bowdoin College Student Assembly's Executive Board.

HOMECOMING KING AND QUEEN CANDIDATES ANNOUNCED

Excitement is beginning to mount for Cohasset's Homecoming on Oct. 24 against Norwell. The candidates for Homecoming King are: Steve D'Onofrio, Bob Donahue, Torin Sweeney, J. T. Price, Jack McNeil, Baron Salvador, Paul Buckley, Mike Ellis, Joe Becker, and Kevin Dooley. The candidates for Homecoming Queen are: Holly Grant, Diane Gunville, Laura Hines, Anne Abbruzzese, Missy Barcombe, Ann Bear, Bridget Farren, Michele Shea, Patty Johnson and Maria Curelli.

The senior class will vote on the king and four finalists for queen. After that, the girls will be interviewed and the queen will be crowned during the game. Good luck, everyone!

COLLEGE VISITORS

There is a continual flow of college admissions counselors to Cohasset High School, sharing information about their colleges. This provides an excellent opportunity to receive first-hand information about schools. All juniors and seniors are encouraged to take advantage of this opportunity. Just sign up in the guidance office prior to the visit. Check this week's calendar for dates.

ATTENTION PARENTS!

Mr. Streeter would like to remind parents to return the evaluation questionnaire to the high school office as soon as possible. These forms will be helpful in the evaluation process the school will be involved in shortly.

DRAMA TIME

Circle your calendar. The play "The Young and the Fair" will be presented Friday and Saturday evenings, Oct. 9 and 10, at the high school.

Licensing construction supervisors

The state building code commission had a set of regulations scheduled to go into effect on Thursday (tomorrow) to license construction supervisors.

But the commission was abolished by legislative act in the last session.

Gov. Edward King has postponed implimentation of the rules on licensing of construction supervisors until next July. However, anyone qualified under the existing regulations who applies before Jan. 1 will be licensed without testing, provided he pays the fee.

Building Inspector James Litchfield said this week the fee of $150 would have to be sent by the middle of December rather than this month, as originally scheduled under the building commission's regulations.

The state building code remains in full effect, according to the governor's executive order, dated last Friday.

Democrats interviewing for Rep candidate

The interviewing team for the Third Plymouth Democrats has been selected. The group, chaired by Hingham resident Bernard F. Stearns, will be interviewing potential Democratic candidates for state representative, in preparation for a Democratic caucus in November.

At the caucus, to be held Tuesday, Nov. 3, at Barnes Auditorium in Hingham, at 7:30 p.m., Democrats from Cohasset, Hingham, and Hull will be able to hear potential state representative candidates and to vote on a preferred candidate.

The purpose of the caucus will be for area Democrats to hear from potential candidates, and to agree to get behind one candidate to support in the 1982 election.

The interviewing team, comprised of two Democrats from each of the three towns, will interview potential candidates, and will compile candidate summaries, which will be released to the press.

The interviewers will ask potential candidates about their stand on various issues, and about their commitment to run for the state representative seat.

Interviewers from Hull are Nancy Burns, 164 Newport Ave., and Leo Pilachowski, 121 Edgewater Road. The interviewers from Hingham are Jon Davis, 1019 Main Street, and John Manley, 43 Turkey Hill Lane. From Cohasset, the interviewers are Fred Koed, 11 Oak Street, and Ned Tebbets, 9 Jerusalem Road Drive.

They will be interviewing potential candidates over the next few weeks. All potential candidates are urged to contact them.

"We're hoping that anybody that is interested in being involved will contact Bernie Stearns," said Jan Colby, Chairman of the Third Plymouth Democrats. Stearns' number is 749-4917.

Morning classes will be held from 10 to 11 Wednesdays, in the Town Hall auditorium. Evening classes will be held Thursday 8:30-9:30 in Town Hall.

Participants may sign up for either one or both classes. The fee is $10 for one class and $18 for both.

This program will be conducted through the self-supporting, Revolving Account Fund and is scheduled to begin Oct. 14, and 15.

The class will consist of a dance warm up, strenuous calisthenic work on the floor, and over-dance stretch and work on jazz choreography. A dance combination will be taught each week. A great over-all work out for strength and flexibility.

Ms. Margaret Watson will also conduct this program designed for 4, 5, and 6, graders. The fee will be $8 per person and will be conducted through the Revolving Account Fund. Discounts may be offered for two or more children registering from the same family.

Together, the simple solution for selective people.

How does Together work?

Phone interview...call us! Before you come into our office for your personal interview, we'll determine over the phone whether we feel we might have compatible people we can introduce you to. If we do, then we'll arrange a...

Personal interview in our office. A trained counselor will answer any questions you might have, and will find out about you...your interests, your background, your preferences, and the type of people you'd enjoy meeting.

Compatibility questionnaire...each member completes our confidential questionnaire, which rounds out and finalizes your personality profile.

The matching...the same trained counselor who interviewed you is also responsible for referring you to other compatible members by analyzing the information from your interview and compatibility questionnaire.

Feedback...We appreciate a call from you after you've met your referrals, since we'd like to know if you're enjoying the people we've sent and if you feel we're on the right track.

Who joins? Engineers, craftspeople, salespeople, secretaries, school teachers, students, professional and working people just like you.

Why do people join Together?

To save time—our members are active, successful people who find that their busy schedules don't allow them time to spend in singles bars.

To save money — our members have recognized that the cost of meeting people via singles bars, singles clubs, dances, etc. can be very costly and more often than not, unrewarding.

To be selective-Together allows you to meet the type of people you want to meet.

Because we're completely personalized — Together offers personalized attention from our trained counselors. We make it a point to remain in close touch with our clients during the period of membership.

Lev Skalsky & Sue Huskins, Consultants

Because we're the largest personalized introduction service in the United States. If you should move or be transferred to other parts of the country where there is a Together office, you may transfer your membership to that office. If you travel and would like to meet people in other cities, this can be arranged also.

Because we're selective about the type of people we enroll in our membership, it is our policy to enroll only those individuals who we feel have something positive to offer the membership.

Because Together works!

Unlucky Skippers fall to Hanover, 20-9

By Rob Tis

The Skippers football team gave absolutely everything it had on Saturday against Hanover in front of a disappointed crowd. It looked like victory for a while but a few untimely mistakes and lack of depth hurt the Skippers.

Regardless of the 20-9 score it was obvious that Cohasset outplayed the Indians. The Skippers had 17 first downs to Hanover's 5.

The first quarter was slow but when it reached the midpoint the Skippers launched a long drive that would leave them at the Indians 7. Not long into the second quarter, Bob Donahue booted one through the uprights for three points. The Skipper defense held tight and the Skippers started another long drive. Bob Donahue took a handoff from Kevin Dooley and ended the drive with a touchdown. This gave Bob Donahue and the Skippers a 9-0 lead. The Indians got possession and soon afterward Rich Evans pulled down an interception. With a 9-0 lead and possession of the ball everything was pointing towards victory but it was not to be. On the very next play Dooley was intercepted. The Hanover defensive back ran it back all the way to the Skipper 10 yard line where Kevin Dooley made a T.D. saving, diving tackle. From here on, however, things went down hill for the Skippers. On the next play Hanover passed for the touchdown.

The Skipper offense remained tough in the second half but could not produce any points. The defense took a pounding but hung tough. Unfortunately two lucky touchdowns ensued. The first T.D. Hanover took advantage of a Skipper fumble and ran it in from the 8. This put the Skippers down by five, 13-8.

As the fourth quarter started there was a mixup in the Skipper secondary and the Indians connected on a 42 yard pass play to boost their lead up to 11 and eventually give Hanover a 20-11 victory. The Skippers shouldn't hang their head however. They outplayed Hanover from the kickoff and they will undoubtably have everything by next week.

Next week is no ordinary game. It is the superbowl of the year, the Hull game. I hope everyone makes the journey over to Hull to root the Skippers on in the big game.

CROSS COUNTRY

The cross country team suffered two early season defeats but bounced back up on its feet against Hull, on Friday, for their first victory.

Abington was the first meet of the year for the Skippers. They found very tough competition but Chris McNabb, Mike Ellis and Paul Johnson all managed to place in the top 10. Hanover, a few days later, was practically the same story. McNabb, Ellis and Johnson did, however, keep the score reputable.

On Monday afternoon the Skippers got it all together against Hull. Chris McNabb ran a gutsy race and crossed the finish line first. Mike Ellis was not far behind to grab second place and Paul Johnson squeezed into the third position giving the Skippers the automatic victory. Jaimie Replogle, coming off a cold, grabbed fifth position. Mark Brown also played in the top 10 for the Skippers. Cohasset has some outstanding individual talent this year and will be a force to be reckoned with, especially in the league meet.

Gilman Churchill (95) loves Cohasset...

"At the time there was a law that you couldn't be reelected as a director after you were 72." the bank president said. "Now we have older directors. The law was overturned as age discrimination.'

The Cooperative was formed in 1916. At the time there was Cohasset Savings Bank but there was no other cooperative bank in town.

The Cooperative was only open one day a month at the start, located in the old G.A.R. hall. Directors were not paid when Mr. Churchill began serving on the board, although after a few years, they received $1 a meeting.

In 1936 Mr. Churchill became the bank's vice president.

At present the assests of the cooperative amount to $12 million.

Mr. Churchill attended Harvard with the Class of 1909, studying a general course. He has contributed to the school every year since then.

Mrs. Churchill, Barbara, died about five years ago.

They were married for 65 years and he described her as "the dearest person to me."

The Churchills had three children — Kempton, Thomas and Phyllis. Phyllis is now Phyllis Tenney of Castine, Maine.

Of Kempton, Mr. Churchill said "His loss was the toughest thing I have ever experienced in all my 95 years."

There were a few other relatives Mr. Churchill wanted to mention in a story about himself; one is Mary Moser of California, a niece who was assistant dean at Radcliffe College and a trustee of Harvard and Radcliffe, and Frederick Churchill of Plymouth, a nephew.

Mr. Churchill is the second oldest male in town, the oldest being Gilbert Tower.

"There are 30 or 40 women older than both of us," he pointed out. He believes in accuracy and other values of traditional integrity.

From the bank, we followed Mr. Churchill to town hall to obtain records of his community service from Gordon Flint. Mr. Churchill had no trouble making his way up the two flights of stairs to the town business offices.

He wanted the dates to be correct. The slip of paper showed a record of service spanning a decade. It goes:

1945 — Acting Military Substitute for August Peterson on Board of Selectman. Returned on November, 13, 1945.

1946 — Selectman for unexpired term of two years on January, 21, 1946.

1946 — Member of Board for erection of War Memorial.

1947 — Salary Survey Committee.

1946 — Water Investigation Committee (Take over of Water Commission by Town of Cohasset.)

1950 — Planning Board, term expired in 1955.

Mr. Churchill has been a Mason for 70 years, and is a member of the Konohassett Lodge. He was raised in the Amicable Lodge of Cambridge during his days at Harvard.

His father was a Mason. His son was a Mason. His grandson is a Mason. He was a member of the Cohasset Golf Club and the Yacht Club for many years.

"And I'm neither a golfer nor a sailor," he said. "But I do love to bowl."

He and Mrs. Churchill used to bowl together. He said he hasn't bowled much since her death. His best string he can recall was 139 at the alleys at the Community Center. He was close to 80 at the time.

One of his great interests has always been baseball and in 1912 he traveled with the Red Sox to their spring training.

"I was told I could go if I paid my way. I went out every day and shagged balls."

The Churchill home is set in the trees off Atlantic Avenue, and on the patio there he talked about his way of life while he waited for his next appointment. He was to visit his doctor later.

He still takes the Wall Street Journal and watches baseball on television until the last inning is over.

"Some days I wake up and I don't feel very well. I say, 'You damned fool, if you don't get up now you'll never get up.' That is my theory to get going."

He said he loves Cohasset.

"It's the personnel that makes the place," he commented on the people of the town.

At ninty-five

By T. Gilman Churchill

When the sun sinks out of sight
I love its after glow.
It gives a vision that we know
That God is here tonight.
And so a sublime prayer I say
That gives me peace divine
So let my world come near to him
When I reach ninety-five.

Back to school Blues common

Pains and mood changes may accompany the 'back-to-school blues.'

So says Family Counseling & Guidance Centers in Marshfield.

Symptoms are headaches, stomach aches, crankiness and assorted other aches and pains, affecting both children and adult family members, prevalent in September, lasting as long as several weeks.

Center psychotherapist John Zrebiec says anxiety levels in children increase when a student has to enter a new school (Norwell's Osborn students are doing just that with closing of that school), facing a teacher a student doesn't like and facing unfamiliar faces in general.

First time students are regarded as particularly vulnerable, says Zrebiec, who also warns that parental concern increases adjustment problems.

Most symptoms reportedly disappear in five or six weeks, but Zrebiec says if not parents should think about professional advice.

Of course, many parents can't wait for the kids to go back to school, and a lot of kids are ecstatic to swap parents for classes.

Widening Margin Ct. brings protest

Margin Court is a steep roadway near the harbor that serves as the home for 10 families.

The latest thought passing through town is that the small roadway might be widened to a 20-foot width.

Charlotte Leland lives on Margin Court and the thought of losing her front lawn to make room for more public parking upsets her, not a little bit.

She never did like the idea of widening Elm Street, at the foot of her street, anyway. She says, and others agree, that the widening of Elm Street caused problems for Margin Court. The widening left the grade steeper than it was to begin with, forcing the town to think about some remedy.

Well that thinking process has gone on for some time with little action.

Charlotte points out that the first time repair work for the Margin Court grade came up at town meeting was 1974.

This past town meeting appropriated $10,000 for reconstruction of Margin Court. Charlotte said the money had been appropriated by past session and ignored.

Last week selectmen voted to rescind their decision to advertise for bids on the Margin Court project.

The plan, as put through back at town meeting, would have adjusted the too steep grade.

Delinquent water bills prompt a tougher line from commissioners

By Patricia Desmond

Water was shut off to 27 homes or businesses last Thursday — all owed more than $500 to the town.

A new batch of shut-off notices will be sent out in a week or so, according to Ben Curley, who runs the town water department.

"The phone was ringing off the hook for awhile," Curley said describing the water office after the taps went dry.

"They were notified since last February about the shut-offs. Actually, they shut themselves off."

It wasn't a case of town officials taking a hardline with a bunch of hardship cases. It was a case of the town demanding payment for continued use of water from people who could afford it.

Water went off at 2 p.m. to the lot. After the shut off, water officials began receiving large cash disbursements, making most of the group current.

"We did make arrangements with one for payments," Curley said. And there were a couple hardship situations in the lot.

But the overall process was one of even-handed firmness.

Most of the people in the over $500 category had been notified last winter their water would be terminated if they didn't pay up or make arrangements. They all made a payment back then. But regular payments were not made.

The bills continued to mount.

The water department went into the start of the new fiscal year, which began July, with a $70,000 deficit. The water commissioners decided to take a harder line.

Curely said he expects the attitude will continue to be stern.

"We have to keep applying pressure," he said.

The 27 water services were turned back on by 10 a.m. Friday, the water department being satisfied about the unpaid bills.

Curley isn't sure whether water service will be cut off to any in the over $300.

"The word is getting around. I think this enlightened everybody.

"We're not trying to hurt anybody. If someone owes x amount of dollars, they can make arrangements to pay so much a week.

"But these people have owed that amount for three years and maybe made two payments in that time."

Skipper player Bridget Farren has a searching eye for the goal during recent field hockey action.

Cohasset receives two special flags

By Donna Cogliano

The flag that draped the coffin of a hero of World War I will be flying on a town flagpole soon.

Selectmen voted last Wednesday to accept with thanks two United States flags which were gifts from residents to the town.

Frederick Peterson of 249 Jerusalem Road donated the flag from the casket of Colonel Hans Christian Adamson, a famous historian for the Army Air Force.

Peterson had received the flag as a gift from his next door neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Christopher. Mrs. Natalie (Lyon) Christopher is the niece of Colonel Adamson and holder of many photos, books and mementoes of her uncle.

Adamson, of New York City and San Francisco, was born in Denmark and educated at Oxford University. He died in 1968, at the age of 72, and was buried in Arlington National Cemetery with full military honors. His wife, Helen Lyon Adamson, was buried beside the Colonel nine years later.

He was an author, newspaperman, and aviator. He was a World War I pilot who flew with Captain Eddie Rickenbacker.

The Flying Fortress (B-17) was forced down in the mid-ocean of the South Pacific. Seven members of the flight, including Adamson and Rickenbacker survived the flight, drifting on three rafts for 24 days before being rescued.

Adamson sustained a broken back during this ordeal. Mrs. Thomas said he lost his sight during his last years due to retina damage from the sun while aboard the raft.

Adamson was the author of many books, articles

Deer Hill Outdoor School needs help

Is the Deer Hill Outdoor School five-day trip going to be an outdoor school, staffed by teachers, or is it going to be a camping trip, staffed by parents and or high school students?

After an hour of discussion Monday night, Deer Hill Principal Kenneth Ekberg asked the School Committee and interested parents to consider the educational value of the trip if it could not be included into the classroom curriculum.

For 10 years, Deer Hill fifth grade teachers have volunteered to supervise fifth grade pupils in an outdoor setting. Students are taught about the environment during outdoor classes and stay overnight.

This year the School Department advertised the seven teaching positions to the Cohasset Teachers' Union, asking for applicants with previous camping experience to supervise pupils 24 hours per day.

As negotiated with the teachers' union, the pay would be $107 for the trip. School Supt. Eugene Crowell said no teachers have accepted the positions.

Ekberg said three of the reasons teachers were not interested this year were that almost all of the teachers who volunteered last year were married and could not afford the time, "the energy effort" or the time away from their families.

He said the trip involves many planning sessions, starting in the fall. Meetings involve other teachers, administrators and parents.

Crowell added the teachers do care about the

Cohasset's week

Combine fuel purchase

Selectmen's executive secretary Arthur Clark wants the town to combine its fuel oil purchase with the town of Hull.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said, "We could save some money providing it's legal."

The possibility of purchasing fuel oil with Cohasset's school system was also discussed. Clark said that Scituate presently purchases fuel oil with the schools.

Transportation fee

Selectmen voted to establish a $10 transportation fee for the removal of animals to the kennel by the dog officer. This was a conditional vote providing the kennel agrees to do the paperwork.

Tree-climber needed

Selectmen voted last Wednesday night to advertise for a 'tree-climber' to work in the Tree and Park Department. Responsibilites of a tree-climber would include cutting down dead trees and trimming dead branches.

Treatment system stalled

Jan Daggett told selectmen last Wednesday night that plans for expansion of Cohasset's waste water treatment system, including a new treatment facility, have been stalled until a federal grant is approved.

"The date has been put off so many times by the state," said Daggett. She asked Selectman Chairman Henry Ainslie if the board would apply some pressure to the Attorney General's Office to meet with the Sewer Commissioners to discuss federal funding. The A.G.'s office holds a court order demanding the town do the work according to a schedule already lagging.

Video license approved

Selectmen approved a video machine license for Manager Ron Wanat of the Greenhouse Restaurant.

However, the Board expressed disapproval on the idea of two video games at Riddle's Market.

Police Chief John DeBassio would not recommend licensing of the two machines since the store is partly a package store. "It has a conflicting purpose and we don't want kids hanging out there," he said.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur suggested "The video machines may promote loitering of some young people and we should think in terms of setting policy — in this case."

DeBassio said Riddle's Market would be an improper environment for video machines. Selectmen decided to take the issue under advisement for further study.

PSAT at CHS

The Preliminary Scholarship Aptitude Test will be administered at Cohasset High School Saturday morning, Oct. 31, in the High School Cafeteria.

This is an important test for students who plan to take the Scholastic Aptitude Test at a later date this year because it provides them with an opportunity to sample this type of examination.

This test is also used to determine who will qualify for National Merit Scholarship competition as Seniors.

Students who plan to take the PSAT/NMSQT should register in the Guidance Office, pay the test fee and pick up an admissions ticket.

Students should plan to report to the Test Center Oct. 31 no later than 8:30 a.m.

Liquor license hearing

Selectmen will hold a public hearing at 8:30 tonight (Wednesday) at town hall over the request for a year-round all alcoholic liquor license for Harbor Liquors. A special act of the legislature allows the granting of this extra license.

At 7:30 p.m. the board will meet in executive session with officials of the police union to negotiate the job of clerk dispatcher, already filled by Yvette Rattenbury.

Wine denial

Wine or any other alcoholic beverage cannot be served at any public school building. This ruling was upheld by the School Committee Monday night after Frances Walton of the Village Fair Committee petitioned the board. Mrs. Walton told the board the Village Fair dinner has grown so large, the dinner could not be served at Town Hall or St. Stephen's Parish Hall. The dinner will be served to adults and the food and wine would be donated. There would be no jugs or bottles available. School Supt. Eugene Crowell said state law and the town charter prevented the use of alcoholic beverages on public property. He added that the state Legislature amended the law, allowing the Board of Selectmen, as the town's licensing authority, to grant permission. The board's decision was aided by opinions from Holly Grant and Paul Johnson, student representatives to the committee, who said a double standard would be set if the petition were granted. Grant asked what would prevent a high school reunion committee from asking for the same petition. Diana Davis Kornet said the committee favors church committees using school facilities but "we can't set a double standard."

Hugo's on block

Hugo's Lighthouse is on the block and is expected to be sold shortly.

The estate of the late John Carzis, which owns the well-known restaurant, has received an offer of about $1.5 million and a purchase and sale agreement is in the works. It was learned that the offer came from two New York men.

The estate recently sold Kimball's by the Sea Motel, also owned by Carzis, to the John Roy family of Cohasset.

New lunch tickets

McDonald's Restaurant's former slogan was that people could have a hamburger, French fries and a soft drink and get change back from a dollar. When the cost of a hot school lunch was recently raised to 80 cents, many parents complained their children were not returning the change from a $1. School Department officials have investigated a ticket policy and plan to implement it by November. Students should be giving notices to parents about the new ticket plan. The proposal calls for families to purchase a block of 20 tickets for $16. This would entitle the student to a Group 1, federally approved hot lunch, and not ice cream. At first school officials thought the block of tickets could be purchased for $15, a $1 discount. But lunch sales have dropped 20 percent since the price increase.

High school evaluation

Twenty-four area educators will be evaluating Cohasset High School from Sunday, Oct. 18, to Wednesday, Oct. 21. The evaluators were picked from the New England Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Results won't be known for several months. The evaluation will be conducted during College Night, Tuesday, Oct. 20. Fifty or more college representatives will be available to discuss college plans with South Shore area high school students.

and radio plays. One book stands out above then all: "Hell Cats of the Navy" which was later made into a movie starring President Ronald Reagan.

The Colonel was the highest ranking officer in his field. He received many awards for making noteworthy contributions in the educational field.

Adamson's title was Chief of Air Force Personnel Narratives. Another of his accomplishments, was a nation-wide tour of high schools to encourage youths to complete their education.

The other flag came from Walter Sullivan, a retired Navy Captain. It is not yet known where either of the flags will be flown.

Selectman Rocky Laugelle said, "It's a great thing to have people donate these flags. It's for a good cause and we are thankful."

Margin Court protests ...

The latest idea, which apparently came from a resident, would cost more than the $10,000 available. Widening the street would involve land takings at considerable expense, aside from changing the design and scope of the work.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said, "If we do the job, we are only going to do it once...so let's do it right — with a minimum of additional costs."

Selectman Rocky Laugelle said, "Considering the safety factor, I would like to see it wider."

The Board decided to ask the residents of Margin Court what they want in a letter. Selectmen don't want to approve additional costs unless residents are interested in the plan change. Residents will be asked to respond in writing by October 13.

Charlotte has already written to the board expressing her disapproval.

"I'm not giving up my land to a road to provide more parking," she said angrily.

She blames the motel in the harbor for the problems, saying the reconstruction of Elm Street shifted the road grade so water would drain away from the motel and harbor.

"They moved the park for the motel, they lowered the road for the motel. Now they want to give them extra parking."

Other town officials say the request to widen Margin Court began with another resident due to safety factors.

Charlotte claims the safety problems would worsen if the small deadend road were widened.

"They have to take hedges that are holding back granite ledge. Heavens, the whole thing would crumble."

Correction

A couple of the captions in the Sept. 30 edition of the Cohasset Mariner were inadvertently misplaced. Chad Coletti, 6, was identified under the picture of Allegra Snyder, 6, who was holding a dressed up teddy bear. Likewise a caption describing Chad as listening to a first grade story-telling lesson at the Osgood School, was put under the picture of Allegra.

Outdoor School needs help ...

students and the reasons for the no interest shown in applying for the positions involved time commitments.

Diana David Kornet, board member, said, "It is a fact of life that people do get burned out. I can understand that."

The board will be studying four alternatives to keep the trip alive. The board could increase the teacher's pay to $200 and offer the position to three teachers; offer the positions to substitutes, offer compensatory time where teachers would be offered $107 and two days off during the school year or offer the positions with pay to seven parents or residents.

The last alternative would involve high school student volunteers but the student volunteers would not be paid.

The only alternative which was criticized by several board members was the one offering compensatory time to teachers. Kornet wasn't warm to the idea of substitutes.

Alan Miller, the board's legal counsel and chief negotiator, will be asked to rule if the number of teachers would be reduced to three and if the wages could be increased to $200.

It is possible trip staffing could include three paid teachers and four parent volunteers.

Another problem will be insurance liability for parent volunteers.

A parents' meeting will be called during the last week in October. Three definite trip matters settled Monday night were the outdoor trip would occur at Thompson's Island, where the Thompson's Island staff is in charge of the teaching curriculum; the trip would occur during the late spring and the cost is estimated to be $100 per student.

The trip is not mandatory for students. A regular classroom would be provided for students not participating. Those fifth grade teachers not supervising the students on the trip would be used as system-wide substitutes or assigned special curriculum assignments by Crowell.

Richard Conley, board member, said the committee should establish some priorities for the trip and that he would like to see an outline of the program before he could support it.

He wouldn't support the program if it was a "summer camp."

"Are we running a summer camp or do we have a good program?" he asked.

The problem, he said, would be how to connect the outdoor classrooms to the classroom curriculum after the trip if the regular classroom teacher wasn't going.

Kornet said there are many people in the community who have teaching and or camping experience. "Chances are that people would volunteer. I wouldn't want to see the program go down the tubes."

Crowell added that the community has been accustomed to the program for 10 years and that "families look forward to it."

Poetry in the classrooms

By Karin Bartow

On Thursday, October 8, Cohasset's teachers will meet two poets who are about to become temporary members of the school staff.

Lewis Hyde, who will begin a four week poet-in-residence program at the Deer Hill School on October 13, and Kathi Aguero, who will be in residence at the Joseph Osgood School for four weeks beginning in early March, will conduct a Poetry Workshop for teachers during the release day afternoon in the Osgood open space classroom.

Hyde and Aguero will introduce their poetry to teachers and will share some work done by children with whom they have worked. They will also discuss techniques that can be used to stimulate creative writing by students and the mechanics of their school residencies, which will immerse students and teachers in poetry.

During their residencies, the poets will share their talents and skills with the schools as both artists and teachers. Half of their time will be devoted to their own work and the remaining half of the residency time will take the form of student core group instruction, class visitations, and teacher training and consultations. A community reading is planned and there may also be a combined art/poetry show in the spring. Plans also include inter-school readings by the poets and their students.

Last winter, parents who in past years have supported arts enrichment in the schools, were intrigued with the idea of a residency described by friends in Hingham. Osgood principal Jack Creamer, and Deer Hill principal Kenneth Ekberg, accompanied the parents to the Plymouth River and Foster elementary schools to see the program in action. They were impressed with the number of students who were touched by the program and the enthusiasm of the teaching staff and community. They saw the residency as an innovative way to provide a new dimension to curriculum that is not presently being supplied and as a supplement to programs under leaner educational budgets. The group declared itself the "Osgood and Deer Hill School's Artist-in-Residence Committee" and applied for a similar program for Cohasset's elementary schools.

The relatively small school enrollment (approximately 300 each) and community (7,600), strong parent support, administrators and teachers sharing a belief in the value of arts in the schools, and a demonstrated need to provide more instruction in creative writing, were compelling reasons for the eventual acceptance of the program and approval of funding.

The Artists Foundation of Boston, which administers the Massachusetts Artist-in-Residence program with funding by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the National Endowment for the Arts, and local matching sources, pairs sites and artists and presents their joint proposals to an awards panel for consideration. Sidney Brian, director of the Artists Foundation, said in his letter of acceptance to Cohasset, "The award is a recognition of your outstanding efforts to develop a high quality experience in your site."

Poets Aguero and Hyde were selected because their strengths and talents complement the needs in the schools. Osgood houses grades Kindergarten to third and Deer Hill, fourth to sixth. Aguero has many years of experience teaching poetry in schools and a proven ability to work with younger children. In addition to many of her own poetry publications, she has written a teacher's handbook titled "Teaching Poetry in the Schools." Hyde has been working with poets and writers for fifteen years, has taught at the middle school and college levels, is a song writer, musician, and author of many published works.

In dividing the two residencies between the fall and late winter, the students will benefit from a year's emphasis on poetry. The most exciting aspect of the residency will be the presence of a professional poet in the school. Students will see that the poet is a "real" person and not an "alien being," a frequently perceived stereotype. The artist in the school will serve both as a catalyst in sparking critical thinking and imaginative expression and as a role model for would be writers and poets.

The schools were granted sixty percent funding for the project, or $1,440. The remaining forty percent, $960, will be raised by local funding. The committee has received a gift from the George H. Mealy Post No. 118 of the American Legion and plans a car wash at the Deer Hill School on Saturday, October 24 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

☐Tom Hamilton of Cohasset, president of the Northern New England Regional Council of the Gallery of Homes, was the welcoming speaker at the National Gallery of Homes Convention held in Boston.

Hamilton is also the vice president of the Gallery of Homes of the South Shore.

☐June Robbins of 277 South Main St. is serving on the College Student Activities Committee at Dean Junior College in Franklin.

Robbins graduated from Cohasset High School where she was a varsity cheerleader and vice-president of Rowsers in her senior year. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Robbins.

☐Penelope Joan Paton is one of 420 freshmen arriving for the 147th opening of Wheaton College in Norton, Mass.

A graduate of Noble and Greenbough School, Penelope is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Paton of 364 Jerusalem Road.

☐Anne Kearney of Cohasset is a member of the varsity field hockey team at Assumption College. A freshman at Assumption, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Kearney.

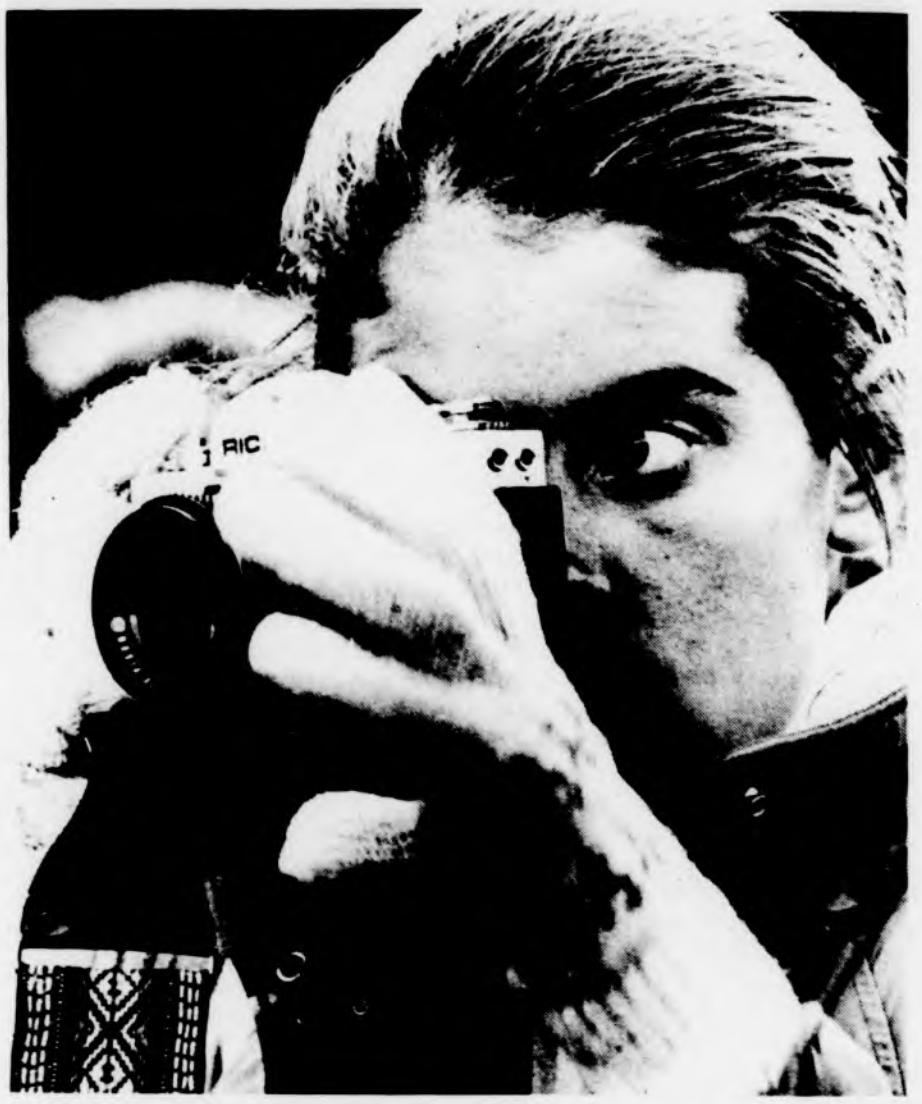
☐Air Force Sgt. Kevin Winn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bartholomew Winn of 280 N. Main St., has graduated from the U.S. Air Force air traffic controller course at Keesler Air Force Base, Miss.

Winn will now serve with the 1916th Communications Squadron at Pease Air Force Base, N.H. He is a 1977 graduate of Cohasset High School.

☐Navy blazers and white gloves were the main order of dress at this year's first Cohasset Dance Party class.

The dances which are held Thursday evenings at the Town Hall for students in the sixth and seventh grades have become a valued tradition in Cohasset.

For many, the classes provide the opportunity of learning the intricacies of correct social behavior. Mr. and Mrs. John Nott carefully instruct their young students in a pleasant but firm way on everything from going through a receiving line to the correct way of asking or being asked to dance.



Joy Pratt, a junior, has a keen camera eye as she focuses in on the action. Joy was taking photographs of a recent field hockey game for her high school photography class. (Derr photo)

Although there were a few remarks about having to wear white gloves from the girls and the situation in general from the boys, just about everyone seemed to be enjoying the event.

☐The South Shore Art Center is growing to the point where it is becoming necessary for it to expand, if it is to continue to meet the increasing needs of its members. Center Director Margaret Dillon notes that the center is in the process of looking for expansion space. The need was an important item on the agenda at the Center's recent annual meeting.

Whether Center expansion plans are limited to an additional Cohasset facility or could mean a move to another town is undecided right now, Mrs. Dillon says.

New officers elected at the Center's annual meeting are Dr. Ubaldo DiBenedetto of Cohasset, president; Sheldon Ripley of Cohasset, vice president; Peter Chapman of Cohasset, treasurer; and Ruth Sholler of Hingham, corresponding secretary.

☐Linda Summers, gallery coordinator for the South Shore Art Center, has been at the Center for about a year now and in that time has been a part of its growth. "My main goal has been to make people aware of the gallery and in so doing serve both the artist and the public," she explains.

Linda, a Cohasset resident, notes that the Center gallery is "of high quality" and draws people from all over to participate. Much of its success is due to volunteers who, she describes as "the core of the organization."

A graduate of the University of Massachusetts, Linda majored in Studio Art and Psychology. She has done her post graduate work at the Massachusetts College of Art and has also taken numerous courses at the art center.

☐Although the weather could have been better, the Sixty Plus Club's trip to the Finger Lakes in New York was a big success, according to club member Bill Jason.

A planned boat trip on the lakes had to be cancelled because of high seas but there were other trips such as to the Taylor Winery and the Corning Glass Factory. Mr. Jason was especially impressed by the produce available in the area. The cabbages were enormous because, as he learned, they are sold to factories to be made into sauerkraut.

☐If you visit Norma at the Carousel Antique Shop on Ripley Road on Tuesdays, you'd best wear green or you'll upset a unique theory which she has developed over the years.

According to Norma, for some unknown reason which we both tried to discover, people tend to wear certain colors on certain days. Since the day on which I was wearing green (and it was a bright green at that) was a particularly grey and damp day, we decided that subconsciously I was most likely trying to hold on to the color of summer and hold off winter for at least a little bit.

☐Christmas may seem still far off but the Village and Harbor Association have already begun making plans for a time which has always been one of traditional beauty and charm for our town.

Fichtner to choreograph 'Camelot'

Jo-Ann Fichtner's impressive list of credits includes most of the popular musical shows done by high school, college and community theatre groups but a new notch will be carved when "Camelot" is performed the last week in October starring Gordon MacRae.

It will also be the highlight of a "Theaterfest '81" celebrating the opening of the new Boston College Theatre Arts Center.

This is the first time Jo-Ann has had the pleasure of working with a star of the stature and stage experience of MacRae.

The Theatre Arts Center building is the newest theatre to be built in New England in many years. The $4.2 million dollar structure incorporates the latest in acoustical design, lighting, sound system and stage engineering, plus an experimental studio along with the main theatre. Mrs. Fichtner is somewhat awed to think she is working on the first show to be performed in the new theatre which is certain to become the standard for instructional theatre facilities.

There will be a gala, black-tie grand opening night performance on Friday, October 30. Tickets for this performance only are $100 per person, including a Camelot Banquet following the inaugural performance.

Jo-Ann has been associated with the Boston College Theatre for the past three years and has choreographed productions of "Cabaret," "Damn Yankees" and "Fiddler on the Roof."

Prior to Boston College Jo-Ann has choreographed many high school and community theatre shows including "Guys & Dolls," "Anything Goes," "Oklahoma," "Lil Abner" to name a few. "Camelot" will be the 13th musical production for which she has choreographed and staged the musical numbers.

But the chance to see her dancers perform in the new 600 seat Boston College Theatre represents a high in Jo-Ann Fichtner's career. And one of those dances will be her own daughter Lisa who has had a very impressive theatre background on her own. Since "Camelot" had open auditions for Boston College Theatre Alumni, Lisa, class of '80, joined the group of 150 auditioners and became a member of the cast.

For ticket information for the "Opening Night of Camelot" or other performances the last week in October and first week in November please call 969-0100 ext. 3280.

Street light shutoff may take a month

It may take a month or so before all the street lights scheduled for shut-off will be unplugged.

Howard Mathews of Eastern said he is beginning to process the selectmen's requests for street light changes but the dimming will be gradual.

As a light is shut off on order of the town, Eastern Edison will leave strips of yellow and black tape on the pole.

"Otherwise, we'd get calls from people complaining the street light went out," Mathews said.

Outdoor School

School committee members should think long and hard before they decide to spend any more than the current teaching contract on staff positions at the Outdoor School.

The contract allows $107 extra for teachers chaperoning students at the Outdoor School.

No teachers volunteered to take the job this year.

It seems the fifth graders, who have traditionally taken the camping field trip as part of their educational experience, could do as well with parent volunteers as with highly paid teachers.

Last year the decision was made by the teaching staff at Deer Hill to move the Outdoor School from Camp Wing in Duxbury to Thompson's Island. The date was changed from late spring to March to keep the price close to the same level. Discussion of the change came up at school committee after the decisions were made and parents notified.

People who asked were told that the facilities at Thompson's Island were superior and would provide teaching staff. Some parents worried about the cold on an island in Boston Harbor in late winter. They were assured the island had buildings that were heated and could accommodate the program indoors if necessary.

Well, the fears of parents turned out to be unjustified on the question of safety. It was indeed cold during the week the children spent at Thompson's Island. The children came back happy with their indoor lessons. It was hardly an Outdoor School experience, but a good one nevertheless.

Now it's time for decisions to be made for this year's program and the school committee insisted on talking about it before final decisions were sealed in concrete.

They are willing to go along with Thompson's Island, in warmer weather, at higher cost to the students and their parents.

And they are being asked to figure out what to do about supervision.

It seems unnecessary to send teachers along as highly paid babysitters. The staff at Thompson's Island handles the teaching well, or so everyone said after last year's session.

The seven teachers who might have volunteered for supervisory duties at Thompson's Island should be replaced by volunteers from the community. And if seven volunteers can't be found, we wonder whether the community believes the trip is valuable.

But we feel fairly sure in a town where community volunteers seem to come through for every imaginable project, from boosting the school sports program to providing recreation at the community center, there will be seven people willing to help the fifth graders.

Still making it in Massachusetts

The power that corrupts

By Paul Steven Stone

No other state in the country plays politics the way it's played in Massachusetts. No other state has its political power concentrated in the hands of so few individuals as does our not-so-common Commonwealth. For all practical purposes the state legislative bodies are owned and controlled by two individuals. At present, these power barons are voted into their immense political domains by voters who live in Lynn and South Boston. That the system encourages abuse is obvious in the deadweight quota of political hacks and no-shows that stick like barnacles to the underside of state agencies and administrative departments.

All attempts to curtail the abuse have been doomed to failure because the core of the problem was never touched. Proposition 2½ made the mistake of redefining the boundaries within which this systemized corruption could prevail. That became obvious when the Registry of Motor Vehicles closed up 15 of its shops and laid off hundreds of poorly paid workers in response to budget cuts rather than scrape off its congealed film of politically well connected incompetents who contribute nothing to the agency except lethargy and confusion.

The power of the Senate President and the House Speaker stems mostly from a tradition of rules that allows them to appoint the committee chairmen within their respective domains. These chairmanships carry more than prestige and enlarged staffs, they mean the difference between a legislator struggling by on a meager salary or living in relative affluence. It's a system that pits a person's conscience against the thousands of simple aspirations he holds for his family's comfort and his personal well-being. Up to now we've been unable to elect enough people with sufficient fortunes or modest enough needs to break a chain of power whose strength lies in the weakness of its individual links. And what we've gotten for our failure is a legislature with hardly the required backbone to fill a single suit, nor enough honor to keep a cub scout merit badge from tarnishing.

The potential for abuse in a system where only small-minded men who play the game can come to power was illustrated when the previous Senate President, publicly disgraced by accepting a $2 thousand check from a firm that gave more attention to grafters than it did to the construction project it was paid to oversee, was allowed to pass on the mantle of power to his hand chosen successor. That successor, Senate President Bulger, as the current Housing Court controversy clearly demonstrates, possessed the instincts, morals and myopic vision so necessary for success as a sheepherder, a gangster or a Massachusetts legislative leader.

The story of the downgrading of the quasi-independent Boston Housing Court, one of the only courts in the state without a backlog, allegedly arises out of a promise made by Bulger to the dying "Sonny" Patrick McDonough that McDonough's son would be well taken care of. According to stories published in the Boston media, Bulger began leaning on Judge E. George Daher of the Housing Court to appoint the younger McDonough to an assistant clerkship in the court. When numerous threats and innuendoes went unheeded, and someone who was actually qualified for the job was appointed, Bulger then inserted an outside section into the Budget Bill that stripped the Housing Court of its independence and lowered Judge Daher's salary.

Representative Phil Johnston, a leader of the reform movement in the Massachusetts House, has co-sponsored an initiative petition along with Attorney General Bellotti that would outlaw the use of outside sections of the budget bill as a means of making law. When asked about the Housing Court issue, Johnston stated, "The entire process was outrageous. No person in the legislature should be in the position to threaten members of the judiciary. It borders on the illegal — if it isn't illegal. As it stands now, we've got public policy and law being dictated by four men: the Speaker of the House, the Senate President, and the chairmen of the two Ways and Means committees. Aside from the different line items, when the budget comes out on the floor of the Senate or the House nobody knows what's in it.

"I don't know any more about the Housing Court matter than what I read in the paper. But clearly a system that allows such apparent abuse must be changed."

State Senator Allan McKinnon also takes issue with the handling of the Housing Court matter, stating, "My feeling is that there's no need to change the status of the Housing Court. I don't agree with what happened." But when pressed about the need to reform a system that allows such massive, vindictive tinkering with state institutions, he draws the line, citing the different perspectives enjoyed by a person in Marshfield and someone working on the Hill.

"I'm not so sure that there would be any less venality if the power was more equally shared by the general population in the Senate," McKinnon said. Unfortunately, some people, particularly Senator Sisitsky, have chosen to use certain issues to their own political advantage.

"This is a glaring instance of abuse, I grant you, but does that mean we should go back and rectify every problem that arose from the budget? We've got the Registry closing offices all over the state, hundreds of people standing in lines — is that any less important than the Housing Court?"

We need to make a distinction for once between the symptoms of corruption, such as the downgrading of the Housing Court, and the source of corruption, the cancer at the heart of the Massachusetts political system — the total concentration of power in the hands of petty politicians who have succeeded in a corrupt game. Otherwise the cancer will continue to spread, and ultimately there will be no room for men and women of true substance, such as Judge Daher, to serve the needs of the people rather than the designs of a few angry and very hungry men.

King will veto any gambling bill

(The following letter to Maria Plante is from Gov. Edward King. Ed.)

Dear Mrs. Plante:

Thank you for your recent correspondence regarding casino gambling in Massachusetts. I appreciate the time you have taken to write to me.

Casino gambling has no place in Massachusetts. The problems that inevitably accompany it can be devastating. We have seen those problems in Las Vegas and, more recently, in Atlantic City, where I viewed the effects of casino gambling first-hand. This, combined with conclusive studies by the New York attorney general and research which my office has conducted, makes the conclusion clear. Casino gambling breeds an extremely unhealthy environment.

For these reasons, I will veto any casino gambling bill that might reach my desk, and use the influence and prestige of my office to keep one from ever arriving here.

Thank you again for writing and sharing your expression of interest and concern regarding this important matter. Best regards.

Edward J. King, Governor

Again, we hope you will run this as a public service to your reading, listening and viewing audiences. Thank you.

Better never than late

A nice woman at the Brockton business office of the telephone company called the Mariner this week about the bill on one of the four lines in the office.

According to the woman the Mariner hadn't paid a penny on its line which has a nearby exchange since the office moved about a mile down the road last winter.

She, of course, was looking for a large sum of money that second.

As she explained the situation the bill sent to the Mariner in August was the first ever at the new address. That bill was for service over the months. The September bill, which they had ready to go out, would include a larger sum for message units and toll calls through the same time period.

"I'm sure we have been paying phone bills all along," the Mariner said, the information not quite digested.

"But you haven't been billed before," the nice woman replied. "Do you have the bills there, haven't you noticed there's been no bill for the Cohasset line?"

"We don't separate the bills by the line. The unpaid bills all go in one pile. As they turn into paid bills they would be separated into folders but I can assure you there is no folder for a special line."

"Well I'm not saying it was your mistake," the pleasant young voice continued.

"Do you make these kinds of mistakes often?" the Mariner began to realize the scope of what had gone on. There was a $700 bill for one fourth of the telephone service in two months.

"It was the computer," she said. "It seems that when you moved, the line was dropped out of the computer and the order was never put back as completed," honey tones said.

"If the line was dropped from the computer how do you know how much to bill for?" the Mariner thought obviously there had to be a flaw in the process.

"The computer keeps track of everything," the business woman said, sounding a trifle exasperated. "Every time you pick up the phone, it's recorded. We just weren't able to send a bill because the order was never put back as completed."

"How did you find the mistake then," the Mariner wanted to know.

"Someone noticed it was a working line," the telephone woman said.

"But what about the month when it wasn't working after the office moved? And what about the fact that another line has never been capable of handling long distance calls."

"Did you report that to our repair office," she asked.

"Several times," the Mariner said firmly.

She explained that there are quite a few problems with the lines the telephone company markets as foreign exchange lines.

"Marshfield has poor service," the telephone company woman said.

"Is that because they haven't kept up with development?" the Mariner asked.

"It's because the central office burned down awhile ago. It's never been fully repaired. They're still working on it. It will be sometime before it's fixed."

(Actually the office is still in the same building, which suffered through a fire a couple of years ago.)

"I still don't understand how you can be sure what the message units were and all if the line hasn't been billed in six months," the Mariner went back to the basic question.

"Believe me, the computer can do it. You have to have faith," she replied.

Observation

Once again, the assassins strike

This is the third time in seven months of 1981 that your weekly paper has been put together to the television's background blare of assassination attempts and successes.

Together we, the Mariner workers, Cohasset residents, fellow businesspeople, young and old, share our anguish at the horrifying recurrence of uncontrolled and unbelievable violence in our lives.

It would seem that those who love peace must fight for their lives. There could be no greater reason for our common despair.

Columbus Day Monday, check what's open

Columbus Day is one of those holidays that leaves people wondering what will and won't be open.

Be sure of this. Schools are closed. So are town offices, the post office, and just about anywhere that employes are unionized. Banks are closed.

Also be sure: it will be possible to buy liquor. Food can be purchased at Cohasset Central Market, or the smaller convenience stores, The Stop & Shop and A & P have declared it a holiday.

There will be some local shops open for those beginning their Christmas shopping months ahead of time or for the serious browser. The Linen Chest opens in the afternoon. The Green Gage Plum will be open.

There's quite a bit of confusion about the holiday. Most of the people who answered business phones in town had to check whether they would be open and what the hours might be.

Reflections will be open. So will Colonial Pharmacy, Sunday hours will apply.

Some people asked the Mariner to call back when the batch of queries went out Monday.

Some were pleasantly surprised to find they had a day off coming. Like the woman at Spensley Chevrolet who thought only the service department would be closed, until she checked.

Anyway, happy holiday.

Rep. Murray out of hospital, back to work

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray is out of the hospital and back in circulation.

On Tuesday she called the Mariner with a few words of thanks for the people who sent her their prayers, cards, letters, flowers and plants during her recent hospitalization.

She said she found that one of the causes for the exhaustion that forced her into the hospital was her work to defeat casino gambling.

"I was overwhelmed by the response from people," Rep. Murray said. "Now I'm back and I'll try to keep from becoming exhausted again."

The Recreation report

The Recreation Department will accept, via phone, registration for magic classes to be taught by professional magician, Joe Carota.

There will be a total of 10 90-minute classes designed for youth 8 to 12 years old, to be held Friday at the Town Hall from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Participants will be taught various tricks including cards, balls, silks, paper, coins, etc. Many of the tricks will be made by the participants.

"It is not enough to simply perform magic, more important is proper presentation," claims Carota. Students will be taught presentation and timing of tricks. Also, the correct way to practice magic will be taught, as well as how to meet and join a professional Magician's Club.

The fee for this program cannot be exactly calculated until the registration is completed — the more participants, up to 15, the less the fee. Estimated fee is $20 for 15 hours of instruction.

Mr. Carota has performed on various television shows, Boston Garden, night clubs, and theaters.

AEROBICS

The Recreation Department will accept registrations for a Grades 4 through 6 aerobics class to be held at the Town Hall, Wednesday afternoon from 3 to 4.

The class consists of a dance warm-up, 15-20 minutes of vigorous aerobic conditioning (dance steps repeated to stimulate the heart and lungs) and a cool-down and stretch segment. Children learn good posture and placement and the course helps strengthen their hearts and lungs.

Ms. Margaret Watson will conduct this program designed for 4th, 5th, and 6th graders. The fee will be $8 per person with a 50 percent discount for two or more children registering from the same family.

To register for either program, call the Recreation office, at 383-6791 immediately. Classes will be limited in size.

JAZZERCISE PROGRAMS

Registration for morning and evening jazzercise classes which will be taught by Ms. Margaret Watson, professional dance/exercise instructor, are now being accepted.

Morning classes will be held from 10 to 11, Wednesdays, in the Town Hall auditorium. Evening classes will be held Thursday from 8:30 to 9:30 in the Town Hall.

Participants may sign up for either one or both classes. The fee is $10 for one class and $18 for both.

This program will be conducted through the self-supporting, revolving account fund. The programs are scheduled to begin Oct. 14 and 15.

The class will consist of a dance warm-up, strenuous calisthenic work on the floor, an over-all dance stretch and work on jazz choreography. A dance combination will be taught each week. A great over-all work out for strength and flexibility.

Fire Facts

Fire Prevention Week, observed Oct. 4 to 10 this year, always includes the date of Oct. 9, the anniversary of The Great Chicago Fire of 1871.

Chicago's conflagration helped convince the nation that standards and legislation were needed to protect lives and property from further disasters caused by fire.

In the Chicago tragedy, 250 persons were killed and 17,430 buildings were destroyed at a cost of $168 million.

Fire Prevention Week, started by the National Fire Protection Association, began in 1911 as Fire Prevention Day. The October 9 anniversary has been observed as Fire Prevention Week in the United States and Canada since 1922.

The week-long observance generates national interest in fire safety and reminds people to practice fire safety measures all year long. Fire Prevention Week is now the oldest nationally-observed week proclaimed by the President of the United States.

Although fire deaths have decreased somewhat, more than 6,000 Americans die each year in fires.

Fire Prevention Week reminds us of the necessity to formulate family escape plans, install heat and smoke detectors, maintain good housekeeping habits, use caution with flammable liquids, use care while smoking and maintain electrical equipment in good condition.

Fire Prevention Week is a good time to build fire-safe habits and to "Learn Not To Burn" all year long.

They used "Famous First Facts" to uncover the name of the first 3-D film, Bwana Devil, released in 1952. "Webster's American Biographies" helped them determine that 1941 was the year inventor Edwin Land invented the 3-D process.

The current Braintwister asks "What president of the U.S. was technically not a citizen when he died?"

MERIT SCHOLARSHIP HONORS

The National Merit Scholarship Corporation has released the names of seniors who are being commended or have been named semifinalists in the National Merit Program.

The students who will receive letters of Commendation are: Suzanne Bird, Michael Birmann, Michael Brady, Kerry Crehan, Steven D'Onofrio, Mary O'Brien, Diarmuid O'Connell and Patricia Walsh.

The following four students are Semifinalists in the competition for Merit Scholarships to be offered in 1982: Stephen Bowen, Thomas Ryan, Gwendolyn Smith and James Sturdy.

Over one million students entered the 1982 Merit Program by taking the PSAT/NMSQT in 1980. Of two groups honored in each annual Merit Program, the larger one includes approximately 36,000 students who are commended for high performance.

Commended students, however, do not continue in the competition for Merit Scholarships because they score below their State's semifinalists qualifying score.

Approximately 15,000 students, or the top half of one percent of the state's high school senior class, have qualified as Semifinalists. To be considered for Merit Scholarships, Semifinalists will qualify as Finalists by meeting additional requirements. About 90% of the Semifinalists are expected to advance to Finalist standing; all Merit Scholars are chosen from among the highly able group of 13,500 Finalists.

In April, the names of Merit Scholarship winners will be announced.

SCHOOL JACKETS

Those interested in getting school jackets may sign up in the high school office. The choice is wool for $46 or nylon for $24.

Osgood Council seeks volunteers

This year the Osgood School Communications Council hopes to enlist volunteers from the community at large.

There are a variety of "job opportunities" available at the Joseph Osgood School. Some entail no more than being a warm presence in a room, while others require active participation in the children's activities.

For instance, due to cutbacks, the resource room can only be kept open for one-half hour before and after school. If someone would volunteer to be in the room, the materials stored there could be made available to teachers and pupils throughout the day.

Volunteers are also needed in the library to help children select books, to restack books, and to check books in and out. If one enjoys more clerical type work, he or she could assist in such tasks as mimeographing, organizing, and stapling the menus, bulletins, and class worksheets.

"Special friends" who have ideas and experiences to share are also being sought. The school would welcome people who would share a hobby or travel experience with a small group of children, or who would enjoy reading to them, or listening to them read.

Any donation of time would be appreciated by the school and hopefully, would prove rewarding for the volunteer. If interested please call Martha Soule at 383-6817 in the afternoon or evening.

There will be a sign-up sheet at the Osgood open house Oct. 20.

Village Shop Talk ...

The Cohasset Mariner once again will offer "Village Shop Talk" by Larry Fone of Cookworks... on a weekly basis.

News about the shops and their goods, some fun gossip plus one person's perception about more serious issues, with one major change; each column will include a question to readers. Larry encourages readers to express their own points of view. Whether it be a product or service needed in Cohasset, or a new idea about town beautification...all channels are open weekly.

Please, by Saturday the latest. Call Larry's shop, 383-1906, or home, 383-0898 (after 6). Enjoy and participate! Hear!

By Larry Fone

So glad the Mariner has once again invited me to write for their Cohasset weekly. Surely hope all you readers will provide some information about things happening in our fine town.

Some good news... Johnny Appleseed will shortly open a fine, new shop at Cushing Plaza. I think this shop will be a great addition to Cohasset.

So glad to hear the Cohasset Hardware will be carrying Moore paints. Personally I always found that paint to be of fine quality and at a good price. A visit to Cohasset Hardware is always such a treat. The wonderful odors of oils, paint and all the nostalgia of an old fashioned hardware store, but still with it, quality, service and a good group of folks to help you.

Cards & Shards is offering hand stencilled cards by Sue Stratley. Stop in to see them and also their extensive giftwares and clothing. Fine products at a good price. And for those folks who have saved "the blueberry money" stop in at Shempan-Smith Shop. 17 S. Main and chat with David. The Oriental carpets don't fly, but Mr. or Mrs. Aladdin could fly visually on their beauty. So many visitors from out of town ask "where is Haggerty Colonials?" Time for folks in town to go take a look at their showroom on quiet Parker Ave. Certainly personifies the New England craftsmen aura! Take a look and take your camera. The area is 100 percent New England Yankee! A treat to the eyes!

Another visual treat is the view from Government Island, that fun climb rock. Cohasset Harbor looks like a calendar picture, and it should be. Wish one good photographer in town would put together a Cohasset calendar. I'm sure any professional could do a fine photo job and with the backing of the Historical Socity. Garden Clubs. Village and Harbor Assoc. etc.

Now is the time to place an order with Grey Wall for custom woodworking. Tables. Chairs. Accessories. An order placed now will be ready for Christmas. A custom coffee table, bench, or repair to a fine family antique.

Cohasset merchants try hard to provide the best available at a good price. Where else can you park in front of the shop you're visiting?

Question of the Week... Should more trees be planted in the Village and Harbor area? Do you care? Seven more are now pledged!

It appears that we have many supers who are concerned about Cohasset and its appearance. And the Cohasset Village and Harbor Assoc. is busting to make our town look better. Fred Wood of Peterson Realty donated seeds for the beautiful white allysum which are drying out in my shop and will be planted at Cohasset Historical houses and museums. Anyone who has any bulbs or seeds for the Historical houses, bring them to my shop! I will plant them! My shop may soon carry fine Italian foods Thurs. through Sunday. Look for the announcement soon!

Shop. Visit. Cohasset Shops. 'Til next week

Jim Ann Howard

Jim Ann Howard, an artist who lives in Scituate, created "The Authorities" above using oils on paper. At left is her painting called "The Delicate Optimism of Women Between Wars." Both pieces were reduced for reproduction in the Mariner.
Both are on display this month at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset along with other works by this artist and Syma, an artist whose medium is pottery.

☐Volunteers have always been one of Cohasset's greatest resources and now, as in the past, the need for the vital services they provide is never ending. There are so many interesting and exciting community organizations with which to become involved. Often, in making a commitment, volunteers discover that they are not only serving the needs of their community but also finding individual rewards, as well. New friends and experiences, a sense of participation and accomplishment are but some of the many benefits awaiting the volunteer.

School enrollment set at 1,469

School Supt. Eugene Crowell was off by 11 students in his enrollment predictions for the 1981-82 school year.

There are 1,469 students in Grades K-12, 81 students less than last year. Here are the totals as of Oct. 1 for the four schools and Crowell's predictions in parentheses. Joseph Osgood, 296 (299); Deer Hill School, 327 (327); Cohasset Junior High School, 267 (262); and Cohasset Senior High School, 579 (592). Enrollment projections from 1980 to 1985 show there could be a net loss of 340 students by 1985. Crowell presented the enrollment report as the first step of the 1982-83 fiscal budget. Crowell said if the projections hold true, by 1985 some of the alternatives school board members would consider are closing the Osgood School, combining the primary grades with the Deer Hill School, moving the seventh grade to the Deer Hill School or sending fourth grade students to the Osgood School. "There are lots of alternatives to explore and many social implications to consider," said Crowell. Whatever consolidation plans are decided must be approved within two years of the actual move.

Teacher credit okay for computer course

Three in-service teaching credits were approved by the School Committee Monday night for 18 Deer Hill teachers who will complete a 10-week computer program. These credits will allow the teachers to move up in the salary schedule. The teachers are learning how to operate the computer, write programs in BASIC Language, computer problem solving and developing resources and materials for the computer for Grades 4, 5 and 6.

Through nearly $5,000 of state and federal grant programs, the School Department was able to buy four computers this year. Two computers were assigned to the high school for math lab students, Math IV computer units, a computer science course, computer assisted instruction and General Math I. One computer was assigned to the junior high school to introduce all Grade students to what a computer can do, for computer assisted instructions on it, and to organize a computer club. A two-week unit will begin in January for advanced and average classes. A color computer was assigned to the Deer Hill School for problem solving, enrichment, remedial and to begin a computer club. Charles Davis, Math Department chairman, and Stephen Hart, assistant to the superintendent, have proposed that nearly $10,000 is needed to increase software capabilities for some of the computers and to purchase another computer so that not more than two students would be assigned to a terminal for instructions. These administrators will be applying for further grants.

Drama Workshop opens season Oct.16 & 17

The Cohasset Drama Workshop will open its season Friday and Saturday, October 16 and 17 with performances of "The Young and Fair" by N. Richard Nash. The play, directed by Ron Emmons, is a fast-moving drama which makes timely comments about idealism, prejudice, and personal ethics.

The scene is a fashionable junior college for young women, and the story shows how a sincere and intelligent alumna (played by Missy Barcomb) returns to teach at her alma mater, bringing with her an idealistic younger sister (Karen Ekbert) to enroll as a student. The director of the college, a conscientious but insecure elderly woman (Samantha Barrett), is responsible to a hardheaded board of directors, one of whom has a daughter who is a student. This student (Amy Urmson), a twisted and jealous girl, uses the threat of her father's influence to throw a suspicion of guilt on two students (Susan Douglas and Joanna Fone). Both psychological disorders and religious intolerance are used to blackmail the two.

Other students appearing in the cast are Julie Atkinson, Christine Barrett, Susanna Barrett, Tina Birmann, Maureen Buckley, Kerry Crehan, Kati Duffy, Cathy Hoy, Maureen Kelley, and Elaine Mullen.

Performances will begin at 8 p.m. in the Cohasset High School Auditorium. Tickets may be purchased from any cast member or at the high school for $2. Tickets at the door will cost $2.50.

Jr. High Communications

The next meeting of the Junior High Communications Council is scheduled for Wednesday, Oct. 14, at 9:30 in Superintendent Crowell's office.

The main topic for the meeting will be the Junior High School social studies program, and members of the staff from that department will be present for discussion.

Social Service League sponsors flu clinics

The Social Service League of Cohasset and the Board of Health are sponsoring two Flu Clinics in October for Cohasset residents. The first clinic will be held on Wednesday, October 21, from noon to 2 p.m.

The second site will be held on Saturday, October 24 from 10 a.m. to noon. Both clinics will be held at the Town Hall on Cohasset Common. A donation of $2 will be requested. Immunization is recommended for those over 60 years of age, plus susceptible high risk individuals with chronic illnesses.

Those who are allergic to eggs or egg products should not receive the flu vaccine. Persons with an acute respiratory disease or other active infection should postpone immunization.

For further information call 383-0771 or 383-0821.

The Social Service League will conduct two keep well clinics during the month of October. The first will be held on October 15, from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., prior to the 60 Plus Club meeting at the Unitarian Parish House at 23 North Main Street.

The second clinic will be held on October 28, 10 a.m. to noon, at Harborview, 60 Elm Street. Blood pressures, urine testing, weights and health consultation will be available to all Cohasset residents.

Jackie's manorisms

By Lois Martin

There was a story in the "Globe" last week that distracted me from my morning doughnut.

It was a description of Jackie O's new place on the Vineyard. And as I read it in my kitchen, which could be described as being ajar, my little head was filled with wonder.

Oh, not for a moment would I have thought Jackie and I'd have similar manors. But I'd naively assumed most women hanker for the same types of conveniences. Jackie's older than I, and we do travel in different circles, though our vast age difference isn't the only reason for that.

PATCHES

Still I'm surprised at her choices in her new home.

The paper said it's a 'traditional' Cape Cod. If that's so, the Cape has traditions that may not be routine to residents there who find a $2 million nook a novelty rather than a way of life.

It wasn't the 'lush vegetation' that caused me to marvel. You take a place like the Vineyard that hasn't had a water ban and the brush is bound to be overgrown.

Her property is called a complex.

I like that. I have a complex too, if you count the clothesline. But hers has a guest house built like a barn. Sounds to me like Jackie wants an out if some people hint around to spend the night. She can always say "Gee, I've only got three bedrooms here in the house...and then there's just that barn out there."

Actually that barn has two bedrooms, four bathrooms, a kitchen, living room and a silo. There's the kicker on the guest house. And I was amazed at the proportion of bathrooms to bedrooms, 2 to 1 in the guest house. And there are five of them in the main house. I wonder if that tells us something. What it tells me is that I'd hate to be the one responsible for the Comet and cleaning.

But what really got to me was Jackie's own little kitchen. I know at my age & stage I'm not inclined to make more work for myself there or to imply to other residents that I'll spring into action at a moment's notice.

Her stove has 16 burners. That's what really unglued me. 16! Who on this earth wants 16 burners facing her every morning. One outlet for the coffee pot's more what I had in mind. That same outlet can be employed for the orange juice's can opener.

Do you realize what 16 burners mean?...One soup stewing, one tea kettle steaming, three sauces slowly thickening, one mess of apples boiling down to sauce, three different vegetables on low, one fry pan full of burgers, a pot of noodles boiling for a lasagna, another dish burbling with spaghetti sauce, a steamed pudding on simmer, and three burners free for anything else from the inspired cook.

Can you imagine the burns she'll sustain from flying grease, never mind reaching across all those hot spots.

I tell you that woman's had my attention before... what with her sleek figure and designer clothes. But this time I'm really impressed. I didn't know she had 16 burners in her.

Not long ago a man who was seated in an audience to which I was speaking approached me afterward to say, "You're working on all 16 cylinders."

I didn't know if that was good or bad. But 16 burners. That's something and I'm the first to recognize it.

No sense getting your ferry tickets for an excursion to visit Jackie. She probably won't be there a lot until next year. 'Cause it's just her summer place. What I really want to see when I stay over in the silo, is how she gets rid of people who've eaten from 16 burners with only three bedrooms in which to allot them. But that's probably where the extra bathrooms come in...complex indeed.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

When we moved to the South Shore many moons ago, former neighbors in Needham came down one weekend, looked around and asked, "but what do you DO all the time?" Then I had no answer, it being December and I was carless and feeling slightly marooned. Now I know that each season brings with it a change of pace that is refreshing and challenging. Right about now, it's a struggle to keep up with the fall bounty from the garden. Jeannie is loading her freezer with stuffed zucchini, Alex is transforming his Concord grapes into jelly, Hank is planting one last crop of spinach and Ginny is stashing away her tasty green tomato pies. Who can count the ways to use zucchini? Way back in '74, Dorothy Aronson sent in this recipe, so good it's worth repeating.

ZUCCHINI CASSEROLE

4 medium zucchini, sliced about ½" thick
3/4 c. shredded carrot
1/2 medium onion, chopped
6 T butter or margarine
2¼ c. herbed stuffing mix or croutons
Can condensed cream of chicken soup
1/2 c. dairy sour cream

Cook zucchini in small amount of boiling, salted water until slightly tender. Drain. Cook carrots and onions in 4T butter until tender. Remove from heat and stir in 1½ c. stuffing, soup and sour cream Layer vegetables and stuffing mix in 1½ qt. casserole. Melt remaining butter and add to remaining stuffing to be used as a topping. Bake uncovered in 350 degree oven for 30 to 40 min. Serves six.

* * *

If the days race by leaving no time for a trip north to view the foliage, a mini-tour of the South Shore offers some beautiful scenery. My favorite place to be on a sunny autumn afternoon is Uncle Harry's farm. Nestled amongst the handsome antique homes on Union St. in North Marshfield you will see his hand-lettered sign offering hand-picked apples and vegetables. The winding dirt lane leads past fields of corn, a deserted little cottage and a pond whose waters reflect the scarlets and oranges of the foliage in the surrounding woodlands. Roll down the car window as you near the orchard, for the air is fragrant with the smell of apples gathered from the trees planted 75 years ago. I not only came away with some luscious Macs, but this dessert which Dick Mounce had enjoyed for lunch that day. For want of a name, we'll call it

UNCLE HARRY'S APPLE PIE

1 c. sugar
1 c. flour
1 egg
3/4 c. melted butter
Pinch of salt and cinnamon and nutmeg to taste

Peel, core and slice about seven apples and place in greased pie plate. Pour above mixture over apples and bake in 350 degree oven for 50 min.

* * *

Some say the Sunday afternoon drive is coming back in vogue. Many find our deserted beaches more inviting than on a hot summer's day and roadside stands are attractive with bittersweet, pumpkins and mums on display. Helen Houghton suggests this dish for the unexpected luncheon guest called

TUNA SOUFFLE

4 eggs, separated
1 can cream chicken soup
1 7 oz. can water-packed tuna, flaked
1 small onion chopped
1 can tomato sauce for topping, heated

Lightly beat yolks and stir into soup until combined. Stir in tuna. Beat egg whites until stiff peaks form. Fold into above. Pour into ungreased souffle dish. Sprinkle with paprika. Bake in 350 degree oven for 45 min. Serve at once after removing from oven. Serves 4 to 6. Tomato sauce is served separately for those desiring a topping.

Economic crunch hits Drama Club over fees for Town Hall use

By Donna Cogliano

Selectmen will meet with officers of the Cohasset Dramatic Club tonight (Wednesday) to talk over the $30 use fee for town hall.

In the past the club paid $25 for performances, with time for rehearsals and set construction allowed without charge.

Florence Kelley, club president, said her group might be charged a minimum of $450 to do one of the three yearly productions.

"What can I say," Mrs. Kelley said. "We just don't have that kind of money. We're willing to pay more than we've paid in the past. But we're not the kind of group that has any money at all."

She said she will bring financial records with her to show the selectmen. She hopes some compromise can be found.

In a letter to the board, Mrs. Kelley called the use fee, designed to cover the cost of energy at town hall, something that "constitutes unusual hardship" for the club. She said it may put an end to the club.

This year is the club's 60th anniversary. It is one of the oldest clubs in continuous existence in the area.

There are other older clubs around but most of them stopped performing for sometime or other, Mrs. Kelley explained.

"We went on performing even when there were no men around," she said.

The club has just announced the cast for its fall production "Table Manners," a comedy played by six actors.

Mrs. Kelley said the plan will go on as scheduled for Nov. 19, 20 and 21 at town hall even if the selectmen refuse to negotiate a change in fee.

The cast is already in rehearsal. They are using members' homes rather than town hall for the rehearsals.

Use of the high school stage would cost the club even more than town hall, Mrs. Kelley said, explaining why the larger more modern facility wouldn't be suitable. It cost $10 an hour for a custodian. The high school is also considered too large for reasonable production of a dramatic event.

The auditorium seats 500 and Mrs. Kelley said only a musical would draw enough of an audience to fill the available seats.

The Dramatic Club puts on three plays a year. The winter production will be "A Man for All Seasons."

That cast will involve 20 actors and will be harder to rehearse in private homes, because of the size.

"Every year it becomes more expensive for us," Mrs. Kelley said. "The cost of everything we need goes up, lumber, lights, make-up...."

She said the club treasurer will be at the selectmen's meeting with her to explain the profit and loss statement.

"We are very concerned about this," she said.

The Dramatic Club was organized in January, 1921. Its first presentation was a comedy "Nothing But the Truth."

Federal sewer money looking good

By Susan Hurley

The town stands a good chance of obtaining federal funds to pay for a new sewer system within the next few months, according to an engineer in the State Division of Water Pollution Control.

Brian Jeans, assistant chief engineer of the Division of Water Pollution Control said, "I don't give guarantees," but added Cohasset stands an "excellent chance" of obtaining the necessary funds "within the next few months."

Jeans cautioned that the Reagan administration is pushing to streamline the construction grants process, but pointed out Cohasset "is a high ranking project."

The sewer project is a "step one, two, three program," Jeans explained.

The first step of preliminary studies has been completed. "We're trying to get the necessary approvals," Jeans added, "we're shooting to get from step one to step two of the plan," which involves design drawings and construction specifications and costs.

The third and final step will be construction.

Meanwhile, town officials and other state officals are also waiting to hear about funding.

Paul Marchessault, an Environmental Protection Agency engineer said, "A grant for the design won't be made until after next year."

Marchessault, who handles engineering for the southeastern part of the state, said EPA has heard

Selectmen axe police dispatcher

The selectmen have sent a dismissal notice to the police department's new clerk/dispatcher, Yvette Rattenbury.

Mrs. Rattenbury hasn't been acting as dispatcher since the state labor relations board ruled against the town and in favor of the police union, ordering negotiations.

The police union rejected the town's offer to terminate Mrs. Rattenbury's job just last month with the warning that if another proposal wasn't made, or their offer (to keep her on with clerical duties only) accepted, they would be forced to accept the town's offer.

"We thought about going back to the state labor relations board and saying that the town was refusing to negotiate, but that would only prolong the grievance process and it didn't seem we could do anything else," one police official said.

There has been some talk of possible court action stopping the town from moving ahead with the plan to fire Mrs. Rattenbury. But the principals haven't seemed to have been involved.

The only offer the town ever made to the union was to fire the clerk.

The police union initially was looking for some sort of benefit, sources say. But when faced with the town's stand on the elimination of the position, the union offered to agree to accept the new category, provided only secretary duties were involved.

Mrs. Rattenbury was the only person in the job classification, developed after town meeting last spring. During the time she worked as a dispatcher, her hours were normal daytime, weekday working hours.

Since the state ordered the town to the bargaining table her hours have been unchanged but her duties have been steered away from traditional police functions.

"There was nothing more we could do," one police officer said after hearing of the clerk's two week notice.

"The selectmen were inconsiderate as far as I'm concerned. They did this without thought to the need of the police chief and the police department.

"The only town departments with more paperwork are the assessors and the water department."

He pointed out that the department had a secretary 25 years ago.

"Things have been going backwards ever since," the police officer said.

School equipment misused, Litchfield says

By Patricia Desmond

The town's building inspector sent a letter to school officials recently asking why one teacher is able to use school department power tools to work in his own construction company.

The letter has been passed around quietly. There's been no public discussion, yet each of the school committee members knew of the inquiry before their last meeting.

Copies of the copies have been made and someone was upset enough about the practice to bring it to the attention of the Mariner.

This week James Litchfield, building inspector, acknowledged beginning the hushed up controversy.

He said he has a letter from Eugene Crowell, school superintendent, saying that he was in receipt of the original letter, dated Sept. 23, and that he had forwarded copies to school committee members.

It went on to say that the school department tries to cooperate with town agencies when possible, whenever it doesn't interfere with school operations. Litchfield said he didn't understand what that meant.

The letter said the superintendent had met with the party involved and had taken appropriate action.

What the action could be will have to be unspoken for the time since school officials were unavailable for more details.

Cohasset's week

Road race change

Selectmen agreed to let the Rotary Club sponsor what was the Jaycees' annual road race. Roy Fitzsimmons, last president of the Jaycees and former sponsor, will manage the race.

Fred Johansen of the Rotary Club has no plans to change the format or route of the race. The event is tentatively scheduled for Sunday, April 4.

Video request tabled

Selectmen tabled a request for two video game licenses at Riddle's Market. The board will ask Raymond Riddle if it would be possible to have only one game installed for a trial period. The police chief opposes the location which has a liquor license.

Engineering contract

Selectmen signed a contract last Wednesday night with E.J. Flynn Engineers Inc., for engineering work on the town landfill.

The contract calls for the firm to prepare reports and drawings for submission to the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering on the continued operation, expansion and closing of the facility and for compliance with the Wetlands Protection Act.

The company will be paid on a fee schedule by the town. The total shall not exceed $20,000.

renewed in January.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur, who visited Harbor Liquors said, "I'm satisfied that they are doing everything that is possible to identify people there."

Chairman Henry Ainslie warned, "We are watching liquor establishments closer than ever before."

GOP Sunday brunch

The Cohasset Republican Town Committee will sponsor a Sunday brunch at the Cohasset Golf Club Sunday, Oct. 25 from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

While the event is not being planned as a fund raiser or a rally, it will afford an opportunity for townspeople to meet and talk with office holders and candidates at the state level, according to Town Committee chairman Julie Guild.

Serving on the ticket committee are Pat Buckley, Rita Strong, and Dr. Edward F. Woods. In charge of decorations are Grace Tuckerman, Dr. Janet Goldenson, and Judy Burke, committee secretary.

Hosts and hostesses will include Dr. Woods, Denise Yess, Richard Silvia, and Tom and Roselle Greco. A committee for door prizes will include Mrs. Tuckerman, Nancy O'Toole, Michelle Buckley, and Judy Burke.

Tickets may be obtained from any member of the ticket committee and from other town committee members. Tickets are $10 per person and there will be a cash bar. All are welcome.

New quarters needed

The South Shore Art Center is looking for new and larger quarters. The present building on Ripley Road is too small for the gallery and courses, according to members.

No suitable location has been found but the search is on.

Court action

The town took Mary Fairview of Jerusalem Road to court this week over an apartment on her property.

The court's decision was unavailable at press time.

Liquor license

Selectmen granted John Muncey of Harbor Liquors a liquor license for the month of December. He presently holds a seasonal license which expires on November 31.

Harbor Liquors has sold wine and malt year round, for many years. The liquor license must be

Aluminum storage

The board of health wants to use a lighting truck for aluminum storage at the landfill.

Selectmen tabled the request while favoring the idea as a temporary solution. The board must find out if they have the authority to give the truck away.

Insurance territory

Plans before the state insurance commissioner call for realignment of towns in the territory system. But Cohasset stays in the same place, territory 6. Hingham is in a category one stepless expensive, the cheapest territory being #1 and the highest being 24.

League to honor U.N. Day

The Cohasset League of Women Voters will honor United Nations Day on the evening of Oct. 24 at the Unitarian Parish House.

The League is fortunate to have the distinguished speaker and writer, Charlotte Saikowski, who will address the issue, "Poland and the Soviet Empire."

Miss Saikowski, a highly respected expert on international affairs, is currently chief editorial writer for the Christian Science Monitor and co-editor of "Current Soviet Policies IV," the documentary record of the 22nd Congress of the Soviet Communist Party.

She has a long history of involvement with both countries. She has studied extensively in Poland and the Soviet Union, she has served in the UN Secretariat and for four years was Master Bureau Chief in the Soviet Union.

The evening will begin at 6:30 with cocktails. Mandarin Garden, in keeping with the international flavor of the occasion, will serve dinner at 7:30 featuring a variety of Szechuan and Mandarin foods. The program will begin at 8:30. Tickets are limited to 100 and are available by calling 383-9766 or by contacting any of the League Board members.

nothing from Washington on whether federal funds for sewer construction would be provided.

Additional studies for the proposed sewer plant are being done Marchessault said. "The actual grant is a ways off."

Town sewer commissioner Paul Gwinn also conceded that construction is far in the future.

Gwinn pointed out Congress is "considering a $2.5 billion amendment" to the federal budget.

"We're following that fairly closely," Gwinn said.

If that amendment is passed "step two would be to get drawings and specs," Gwinn added.

Expansion of the present sewer system was mandated by a state court order two years ago because of sewage waste water that was being dumped into Cohasset Harbor.

Because the current system is capable of processing only a fifth of the waste water that passes through it, the state forbade further sewer hookups until the system was changed.

LIBRARY

The new librarian, Mrs. Jean Gattuma, is providing the seventh grade students with interesting and exciting suggestions for reading. Recently Mrs. Cronin and Mrs. Schleff's seventh grade classes visited the Cohasset High School library for an introduction and a book talk. Mrs. Gattuma captured her audience with science fiction tales and non-fiction stories. As a storyteller and a dramatic reader, she was able to interest the students and also provide concrete suggestions for books in their reading level.

college night will be held at Cohasset High School. Juniors, Seniors, and their parents from the town of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and Scituate are invited to attend. Representatives from about one hundred and fifty (150) colleges, universities, nursing schools, and technical schools will be available to answer your questions and distribute materials. A listing of those colleges attending will be distributed in homerooms in the near future.

This event should provide an outstanding opportunity to receive first hand information about educational opportunities after high school. This is an activity that all college-bound Juniors and Seniors and their families should attend.

Miss Patricia E. Perreault and Mr. William P. Bennett announce their engagement. Miss Perreault, formerly of Weymouth, is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College, and a former high school mathematics teacher and cheerleading coach in Cohasset. She is currently employed as an actuarial assistant with the Wyatt Company in their Washington, D.C. office. Mr. Bennett is a graduate of Princeton University and Duke University Law School. He is a trial lawyer for the U.S. Postal Service, also based in Washington, D.C. An October 26 wedding is planned, followed by a honeymoon trip to the Virgin Islands. The couple will reside in Arlington, Virginia.

School equipment ...

Litchfield said he was concerned about the use of school department power equipment used to construct a home. The work was done by a school teacher for his own company in a high priced neighborhood of town.

"I know what it costs just to turn a piece of equipment like that on. What with the town shutting off street lights and all, it didn't seem right. Other contractors don't get the free use of equipment.

"I heard nothing after I sent my letter out. I figured I'd let dead dogs lie. How did you hear?" Litchfield asked.

His letter went to the selectmen and town counsel as well as to school officials.

Litchfield said that when he began asking questions about the power equipment, he was told it had been going on for years and nothing was wrong with it.

Drama Club ...

In the early days the club did one production a year with monthly play readings.

Mrs. Kelley said she hopes a set fee can be established for each of the club's productions.

Last week Selectman Rocky Laugelle said, "We will try to do what we can for them."

"We have to be consistent and not make exceptions for some and not for others," Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said.

Cohasset's Chris Abbruzzese has gained 99 yards in 19 carries as the fullback for Bowdoin College's varsity football team. The club had a 1-1 record going into action against Tufts this weekend. Abruzzese is a junior.

Gregory Smith, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Smith of 21 Fisher Road, has received a $200 scholarship from Ithaca College, Ithaca, N.Y. He is a sophomore at the college.

The Cohasset Village and Harbor Association is in the process of reorganizing itself into two distinct groups, according to chairman Eugene Price.

Right now, the legal technicalities are being worked out by the association's lawyer, Richard Henderson, says Price, who reports that association members want to broaden the base of their organization.

"In the past, people felt they had to be a merchant to be involved in the association," he continues, "we hope that this will encourage more people to join."

The big old house at 39 Beechwood St. will soon be up for sale but there are so many different memories connected with it that there is no doubt it will be remembered.

Even now there are many Cohasset children who watch it wistfully and hope that "maybe there'll be another haunted house, there, again this year." What a perfect place for a haunting experience — even in the day time, the big old building looks like it's been borrowed from the set of some horror movie.

And then there were the handicapped who came back year after year to spend the summer at Harmony Hill. Many of us had the opportunity of getting to know some of these people as we saw them around town and at the beach. To them, Harmony Hill had come to mean something very special.

Building Inspector James Litchfield explains there were numerous areas in which the building needed upgrading to meet state regulations and so the camp ceased operation in 1979. Currently, there are problems with vandalism, continues Litchfield, who has been notified by the executive board of the camp of their intent to sell as soon as a percolation test has been completed.

Best wishes to Mrs. Betty Reddie for a speedy recovery from her fellow employees at the town hall and from the Mariner.

The Cohasset Community Garden Club has long been noted for its contribution in making the village area the attractive place it is, but the club is not about to rest on its laurels (ahem); members have been busy preparing an extra bonus for spring at the grounds of the community center. One hundred bulbs have been carefully planted under the direction of Mrs. Martha Gjesteby and Mrs. Margaret Young.

Birthday greetings to Kenny Sargent from his fellow employes at town hall and the Mariner.

Oct. 14 is a special day for Charyl and Jay Fiori who were married on that date, three years ago. Happy third and many more to you both!

The quick response to last week's fire at St. Stephen's Church was a relief to many, especially to Brian Ramsay who discovered the fire on his way home. As he was passing the church, he thought he heard a snap and then with the smell of smoke making him realize what was happening, he ran for help. Luckily an ambulance was returning to the fire station after a call and Brian was able to stop it and call for help.

With the hint of snow already in the air, Joe Laugelle is eagerly awaiting this year's ski trip with the Sociables. His only hope, he says laughing, is that, this time, everyone will be able to put on, take off, carry and keep track of their equipment without his much sought after help.

Dispatcher mess

The town officials involved in the termination proceedings for Yvette Rattenbury, police department clerk dispatcher, should hang their heads this week.

The decision to let her go rather than bargain in good faith with the police union over her job is nothing to be proud of.

Mrs. Rattenbury has done nothing to cause town officials to dismiss her. The police union merely demanded and the state labor relations board agreed that there should be a collective bargaining process in turning the position of one police vacancy into a civilian, non-union, clerk dispatching job.

The town, on advice of counsel, fought the union's bid to negotiate. They lost. Now they expect Mrs. Rattenbury to pay for their mistake.

Police union officials have tried to give the town an opportunity to create a job they might be able to accept, accepting the loss of one patrol person, and demanding nothing but that the civilians be kept out of the dispatching area.

The police union happens to think the department can benefit from the services of a secretary. That was part of the original idea for the clerk/dispatcher's job.

The selectmen would be well advised to rethink this position. Only they know what went on when in executive session, they decided to scrap the job.

We'd be happy to hear from them on the topic. Any response may be left at Colonial Pharmacy in the Village by noon next Monday, or mailed to PO Box 71, Cohasset, 02025, or given to our reporter at the selectmen's meeting Wednesday nights at town hall.

Osgood artists

Congratulations to the parents who put together the wherewithall to bring the Artists in Residence program to Osgood School.

We hope their car wash Saturday, Oct. 24, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. is a resounding and dollar crumpling success. We also hope they keep up the good work, making sure that the cultural pluses in the school system increase rather than decrease despite budget problems.

Thanks should also be given to the American Legion post for tossing in some of the needed money and of course the Mass. Council on Arts and Humanities, the National Endowment for the Arts.

Poetry is a way of opening young minds to the beauty of literature, to the beauty of words. The money spent on the artist in residence program is a wonderful investment in the future of our children's minds.

'We are all eligible ...'

By Tanna Kasperowicz

Commentary

When I was a youngster I once challenged my minister to offer proof of a living Jesus Christ.

He wisely said while he couldn't present any physical proof, the most important thing for all of us to remember was that all the stories about the man were good ones.

"There were never any reports of Jesus having hurt anyone, having caused anybody to go blind, having crippled anyone"...having assaulted or battered anyone into a comatose state.

In recent weeks Massachusetts residents have watched the development of a very sad story about a former resident of Abington who was hurt very badly by five or six men from Holbrook.

We may never know whether the woman struck any kind of an agreement to participate in any manner with her attackers. But of one thing we can be certain. She did not agree to be left in a state of shock, or agree to become comatose. She did not agree to have her automobile totalled. If she were so agreeable, why did the men find it necessary to bind her wrists and threaten her with death? Most business propositions do not end with one of the parties being left naked in 12 degree weather in a deserted location.

At some point after her attackers were finished with her, her "rescuer" knew exactly where to take her...not back to the bar. But to a first aid station, after which she was hospitalized and went into a comatose state, lingering between life and death.

A judge fined the men in question court costs. He chalked it off as a "sexual adventure"...just some young boys feeling their manhood.

This 110 pound woman lured some 1,000 pounds of manhood into a compromising situation and they were helpless to stop beating her, abusing her, threatening her for five hours.

If the woman had been left in this state after having been run over by an automobile, the judge might have delivered justice in a fairer manner. That would have been a sexless crime. But she had the additional stigma of being a woman.

Patricia Desmond, Editor of this newspaper, and I talked about what happened this week. We both felt frustrated and at odds as to what to do about this strange deliverance of "justice" by the Massachusetts Court system.

As of this week, we have opened a fund for the woman at the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, 48 South Main Street, Cohasset, 02025. Checks should be made out to DAMAGES FUND. The bank will be the trustees of the fund and at a certain point in time a check for the amount of contributions will be mailed to this woman.

Certainly, no amount of money can ever make up to this woman or her family what they have lost. Fundraising is just something we find ourselves doing for victims of fire, accident, disease...this victim of the Massachusetts Court system is certainly still a victim in all respects.

If anything is going to be done about rape, it will have to be done by women. We are eligible to participate in this good old boys' sport from the time we are infants in our cribs to the time when we are nursing home residents. Good girls, bad girls and old girls get raped.

Joys of the Registry lines

By Claire McDonough

"We have to get a wedding present for Paul and Terry," the Dragon told me.

"Who are Paul and Terry?" I asked. "When are they getting married? And why are we giving them a present?"

"They got married last Thursday," he replied. "Don't you remember? I met them in the line in Plymouth when I tried to register the Duster."

"You did say something about it," I admitted, "but it seems strange to me. Why were they registering a car on their wedding day?"

"Because they didn't know it was going to be their wedding day," he explained patiently. "They only met when they got in line at 8:45 on Thursday morning. By 3:15 they had been through a lot together, and it was clear that they were in love. We took a vote and decided that if there's no indication that a line is ever going to end, the Registrar or his agent is empowered to perform mariages — just like the captain of a ship."

"It still sounds weird," I insisted. "An entire courtship in the line at the Registry? Still, I suppose you do get to know people pretty well under those circumstances."

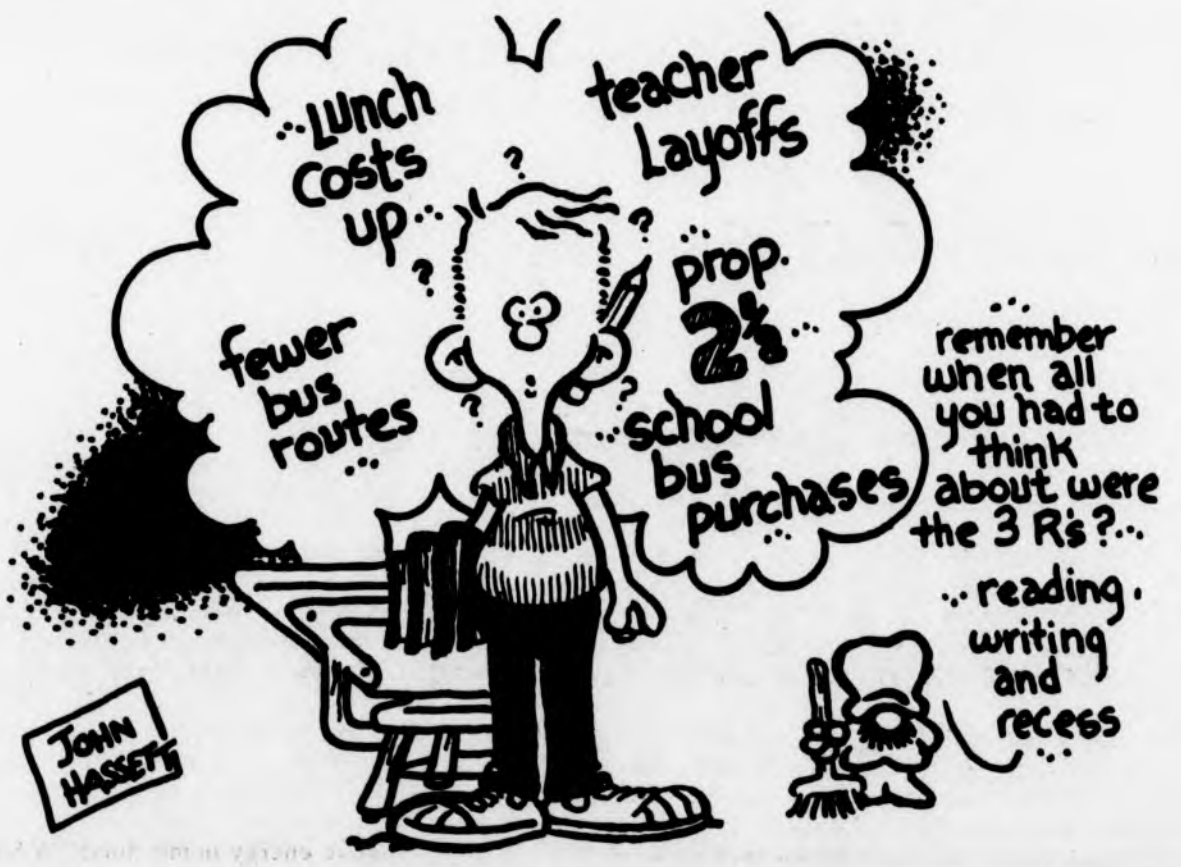
"You'd better believe it," he breathed fervently. "Emergencies and disasters bring out the best and the worst in people. After waiting in line five hours, three guys started looting parked cars. By the time they were through, they had 46 hub caps, 67 license plates, and 12 statues of Jesus. Someone else mugged a meter maid and tried to open a gambling casino. And one lady wanted us to secede from the union and make her empress. On the other hand, there were people who shared their Drakes cakes and their Tab, I feel that I established some real, lasting relationships. One lady even ran into a hardware store and bought a Mister Coffee. It was a godsend. We were able to drink a toast in coffee when George and Rita had their baby."

"I don't think I want to hear about that one," I told him.

"Maybe we should discuss it," he objected. "They want me to be godfather."

"Do you really think you owe them that much?" I asked. "I don't want to sound unkind, but what have they ever done for you?"

"Are you kidding?" he gasped. "You can't buy friends like George and Rita. They're holding my place in line."



Disgusted over property thefts

Letters

To the Editor:

I'm writing this letter because I'm totally disgusted. In the past few years three bicycles, two skateboards, a pick-up truck (recovered stripped and damaged), four jackets, two pairs of sneakers, two tape players, jewelry, coins, etc. have been taken from our family. Some things have disappeared at school and some from home.

Do you know how many lawns were mowed, wood chopped, and chores done over a year by our son to buy a tape player with a headset and a pair of leather sneakers? He took these to camp this summer to work at a non-paying job as junior counselor and they were gone within a week and a half.

This weekend was the last straw. Someone took a portable radio-cassette player belonging to our daughter when she was in a private home among people she knew. Do you know how many nights I carried heavy trays at my job so I could buy that, as her one and only birthday gift? What kind of people take things from their friends?

Last summer someone took a star sapphire ring and silver dollars off my daughter's bureau. These were the only things she had of her grandmother's.

We have been taught to respect other people's property and have tried to instill these values in our children. How can they trust those values when they fall victim to people they trust? My daughter has appealed to her friends to try to recover her player. I hope someone listens. I'll sign

Saddened,
Joan Brown

Wearing blinders over casino issue

To the Editor:

Helen Bond's letter pleading for a casino in Hull reminds me of the "good old days" when delivery men driving horsedrawn wagons, guided their horses down the streets while selling their wares. These horses had blinders on their heads so that they could only see straight ahead while they plodded wearily while waiting for the end of the day to enjoy their oats.

These casino proponents should remove the blinders on their heads so they can see the present picture as presented by the Joel Grae Associates and other developers who are on the scene. Grae's proposal for luxury condominiums and a marina could add $50 to $60 million to our valuations.

Without these blinders, they could see the luxury garden type apartments now being built on Green Hill which will add well over $2 million onto our valuation when they are all completed. What about the luxury condominiums soon to be built on George Washington Blvd. costing over $8 million? And do they ever stroll by Telegraph Hill to see the other condos now being built?

Why do these casino dreamers close their eyes to these developments which would give us the financial relief without getting more serious street crimes and traffic problems from a casino?

If a casino is supposed to be the best economic route, why is it that none of the many thousands of cities and towns in the other 48 non-casino states clamor for a casino to solve their financial problems?

Instead, these eager beavers continue to plod down Nantasket Avenue with blinders, looking ahead only to the Hall Estate and dream about a casino while also crying to the Heavens for freedom of the ballot boxes, our flag, motherhood, home rule and what not.

Scituate Galleries to open new showroom

South Shore art aficionados will be pleased to hear that Scituate Galleries has opened a second showroom at the Wishing Well, Route 53, Norwell.

According to gallery owner Elaine Burns, the new gallery will offer the same quality in limited edition prints, originals and prints that are featured in the Scituate Harbor location, as well as custom framing services. Sharon Brunner of Holbrook has been named Gallery Director.

To celebrate the opening of the gallery, Scituate Galleries has released "NOAH" by Scituate artist Donna Green, the second in a series, "Through the Eyes of a Child." "NOAH" is a delightful portrayal of a young boy with his best friend, his dog, faithfully nearby.

"In the painting, I wanted to show the warmth, the coziness and the security of home," Green says of her painting. "I wanted to create the feeling that this little boy is in an imaginary world of his own. He is NOAH, and is getting all of the animals on the Ark before the floods."

Born in the Massachusetts seaside community of Cohasset, Donna Green is a self-taught fourth generation artist. Her great grandfather, John Frederick Spencer, was a lithographer, noted architect, and late 19th century romanticist painter. B. Spencer Green, Donna's mother,is also an artist and provided Donna with much encouragement and guidance during her early years of painting.

After graduation from high school, Donna worked for an international electronics firm as a technical illustrator. However, after three years, she discovered she was not "cut-out" for the day to day routine of corporate life. She needed to be free; free to develop her inborn talent of creating art on canvas. In 1977, she received recognition from the Boston Globe when the paper featured her painting of an alternative energy home titled "A Struggle to Endure," in an article on conservation of energy. In 1978, she was commissioned to design the national logo for the Humane Society.

Her paintings are like mini treasure hunts in that "I always want people to find something new in my pictures that they did not see before." Donna's subject matter is varied; from wildlife to still life; from surrealistic to realistic. But always, there is the unique detailed style of Donna Green — bold and vibrant one minute, warm and sensitive the next. The environment has begun to play an important role in Donna's paintings. Her husband, Bob, is a carpenter by trade, but devotes all his spare time researching sources for alternative energy.

Scituate Galleries at the Wishing Well will be open Tuesday through Friday from 10 to 8:30, Saturdays from 10 to 6 and Sundays from 1 to 6.

Video game

If the police chief thinks it would be a bad idea to license two video machine games at Riddle's Market because it might attract teenagers to hang around, we wonder why the selectmen are thinking about putting in one video game there?

Is the idea that one would be half as bad as two?

Or do the members just disagree with the police chief's approach of trying to reduce youth drinking by eliminating the temptation as much as possible?

The license request is still sitting on the selectmen's table.

Rabies vaccinations

Because of a positive case of rabies in Foxboro last month, it is suggested that all dogs who have not been vaccinated against rabies since 1979 be vaccinated.

All dogs over four months of age who have not been vaccinated and all cats who go outside should be vaccinated if they have not been vaccinated within one year. If you have any questions you should contact your veterinarian.

Inflation hits the cost of history

By Donna Cogliano

If you want a copy of Cohasset's narrative town history be sure to purchase the book before November.

The price of the book, which was written by Burtram Pratt will increase from $3.50 to $7.50. The wholesale price for non-profit groups and book dealers will be $5, with a minimum purchase of one case of 36 books.

Three thousand copies of Cohasset History Volume II were printed in 1956. Today 1,314 books remain unsold.

Selectmen voted unanimously last Wednesday night to approve the increase after consideration and discussion of four options which Pratt outlined at a meeting last month.

Pratt suggested: 1) reducing the price of the book to its cost of $3.23 a copy; 2) continuation of current price with increased promotion; 3) raising the price to $7.50 which is currently charged in some local shops; 4) raising the price to $10, which is charged at Goodspeed's Bookstore in Boston.

Pratt recommended option number four to selectmen, which he said, could net the town $8,647 if the final 1,314 copies were sold. Selectman Mary Jane McArthur supported the option.

McArthur said, "We should not exhaust the books...there is always an interest in town history. Ten dollars is not too much." She said the market will continue to be there and so a uniform price is necessary.

Selectman Rocky Laugelle disapproved of the $3.50 to $10 jump, "I don't feel as though we are in the book selling business. We are in the history selling business." Chairman Henry Ainslie agreed with Laugelle's observation.

"I can see raising the price. But three times the amount?...is too much," Laugelle said.

McArthur then suggested option number three which was unanimously approved by the board and will take effect on November 1.

The price increase for Volume II will net the town about $5,362 when all the copies are sold.

Magner leads local United Way drive

Cohasset's annual campaign for the United Way of Massachusetts is now under way, again headed by Robert P. Magner, vice president of Cohasset Savings Bank.

Last year he directed the drive that earned the town the distinction of being the most improved among all the participating communities.

"Cohasset people responded generously last year," Magner said, "and already in the first week of our campaign this year there are signs that we can go over the top again. Individual contributors throughout the town have received a letter seeking their support again, and I have sent a special appeal to 110 local business people."

The United Way is a major source of annual operating funds for over 200 social agencies throughout eastern Massachusetts. By a single contribution to the United Way, the contributor helps many organizations that are depended upon by hundreds of Cohasset residents for essential health, social welfare and recreation services.

"This year we're stressing that the American Cancer Society is a part of the United Way," Mr. Magner says. "This means that contributions to the United Way will also help this important research and service agency. Once again we're reminding people that inflation hits social agencies just as it does everyone else. And, finally, we're hoping that contributors will feel more generous since they are getting a cut in their federal income taxes...which they can, of course, reduce also through a charitable contribution."

Fire Facts

Gasoline is a highly volatile liquid that when used safely provides energy to operate our automobiles, lawnmowers, pleasure boats, and other machinery. Gasoline, with its invisible but explosive vapors, presents one of the worst burn and fire hazards. Gasoline vapors are produced even at temperatures below zero and can be ignited by such sources as a lighted cigarette, a pilot light or an electrical spark.

A few important precautions for the safe use of gasoline include:

☐Never refuel small engines, such as motor bikes, outboard motors, chain saws or lawnmowers while the engine is hot. Never refuel them indoors or in a garage.

☐Smoking must not take place around gasoline.

☐Gasoline should not be used to start a fire in a charcoal grill, fireplace, or coal or woodburning stove.

☐Don't use gasoline to remove paint from clothes or skin or to clean equipment parts. Many people have died or have been seriously burned while using gasoline for clean-up jobs.

The safest advice for storing and transporting gasoline is — DON'T! If you must keep a small amount of gasoline on hand, take these precautions:

☐Don't store gasoline in the home.

☐Keep gasoline in the garage or tool shed away from sources of ignition.

☐Keep the gasoline in a safety can, the can should have a spring closure valve, vapor vent, pouring spout and carry the label of a testing laboratory.

☐If you must carry gasoline from the filling station to home, use an airtight, unvented can. Don't fill the can more than three-quarters full. This leaves space for expansion of vapors.

☐Never store gasoline in a glass jug, discarded bleach bottle, or other make-shift container.
